Restoring Ancient Delphi The Beautiful City of Apollo.

BRONZE HEAD OF GRIFFIN FROM DELPHI.

BRONZE BIRD FROM DELPHI.

THE French Government is restoring Delphi, the most beautiful city of ancient Greece, and will make it look just as it was at the height of its glory.

The preliminary work consisted in excavating this wonderful site, rich in its buried treasures of ancient art. The French Government has already spent millions of dollars on the work, and will spend much more before it is finished. The result will be the most marvellous and wonderful restoration of ancient art and architecture ever seen.

The archaeologist in charge of this work, M. Theophile Homolle, has just published a new report concerning his latest discoveries, which is remarkably interesting.

Delphi was the religious centre of ancient Greece when at the height of its glory. Everybody came to the Temple of Apollo and sought guidance from the famous oracle, the priestess who sat over the tripod behind a curtain and gave ambiguous or oracular answers to those who put questions to her.

Statesmen and kings came to consult the oracle when they thought of declaring war or doing anything of great importance. The most beautiful women of ancient Greece brought offerings to the temple when they wished to obtain advice that would help them to get some object of their desires—the love of a man, the death of another or whatever it might be.

All the cities of Greece maintained treasuries at Delphi, where they kept quantities of gold and silver, because these treasures were safe from attack in the sacred city of Apollo.

The whole city was a great collection of temples, alcoves and buildings that were great works of art in themselves, and were filled with other beautiful works of art, such as statues, armor, paintings and bic-a-brac.

Among the beautiful objects of art recovered is the head of the poet Agias, which is remarkable for strength and beauty, and is worthy to rank with the works of Phidias.

There is also a majestic figure of a woman, dating from the fourth century B. C., which unfortunately is without head or arms at present.

M. Homolle has unearthed thousands of objects from the temples, such as the head of a griffin, which is shown on this page, helmets, suits of armor, brooches, pins, mirrors, gumbs, rings and ornaments of all kinds.

M. Homolle has also unearthed an astonishing specimen of primitive Greek art from the front of the treasury of the Cnidians.

This tells the ancient tale of the "Contest between Hercules and Apollo," one of the most famous feats of that ancient hero. It had been brought about by the murder of Iphitus by Hercules, who was despised of men for his crime, and then sought the favor and assistance of Apollo at his temple in Delphi. Apollo, however, was friendly with Eupytus, King of Oechalia and father of Iphitus, and the deity refused to pardon Hercules.

The hero would not, however, be denied, so he easily forced his way into the Holy of Holies of the temple, snatched up the tripod and was taking it away to found an oracle of his own when Apollo, angry as a Greek god could be, faced him and caught hold of the tripod to keep it. A terrible fight would have occurred on the instant had not Zeus seen the danger and separated the combatants with his lightnings. This is the moment that the sculptor has selected for his wonderful group, considered by the best judges as one of the finest specimens of Greek art of the early period ever discovered.

When the remains of the great theatre at Delphi were uncovered by the French excavators other feats of Hercules were found as the frieze of that remarkable

JUST WHY YOUR HEART DOES NOT PUMP PROPERLY

Perhaps It Is Indigestion, or Excessive Indulgence in Tobacco or Alcoholic Drinks, or One of Seven or Eight Forms of Heart Disease, or Premature Hardening of the Arteries—But Whatever the Cause, Recent Discoveries of Science Tell You What to Do About It.

Photograph of a Human Heart and the Arteries and Veins Where the Circulation of the Blood Begins and Is Completed.

"PROSTRATED by the heat—heart action weak." The latter part of this familiar emergency hospital case report during this hottest Summer in many years tells the whole story.

If your heart—the most wonderfully constructed, most powerful pump ever created—and its system of pipe lines (the arteries) are sound and in perfect working order, you are in no danger of heat prostration.

If your vital organ and its appendages—your pumping works—are in prime condition, you don't need to worry much about your health, whatever the temperature may be.

Of late medical and electrical science have combined in series of experiments which have brought forth new and valuable means of restoring strength to hearts that are weak or functionally diseased, and elasticity to arteries that have become hard and brittle before their time.

"Heart disease" no longer, in most cases, need be the paralyzing bugbear it formerly was. Medical specialists in this department have solved most of the mysteries that have so long surrounded this organ, which must continue tirelessly active from birth to death.

One of those specialists, Dr. Samuel G. Tracy, of New York City, presents for readers of this newspaper a general view of the whole subject. It is information that should be possessed by everyone.

By SAMUEL G. TRACY, B. Sc., M. D., of New York.

THE human heart stands more wear, tear and abuse than any other organ that of the body. From the inception of life down to old age it constantly pumps the vital fluid, i. e., the blood. It may be considered the vital organ of the body, and being such it is most important that we conduct our lives so as not to injure it.

The athlete outgrows his heart by overexertion, producing what the doctors call hypertrophy, or enlargement of the heart.

The constant excessive use of alcoholic beverages has a similar effect. Tobacco used to excess poisons the nerves of the heart and gives it an irregular action.

Indigestion is often the cause of much disturbance of the heart. Rich foods containing much sugars and starches ferment easily producing gas, which in turn distends the stomach, presses on the diaphragm, cramping the heart in its action, making it irregular. Hence, an attack of acute indigestion with distention of the stomach is sometimes the cause of sudden death by crippling the heart.

In addition to these conditions there are many pathological or diseased states to which the heart is subject. First—Pericarditis, an inflammation of the outer covering of the heart, usually due to rheumatism. Second—Endocarditis, inflammation of internal sacs, with an accumulation of little deposits around the valves of the heart, frequently associated with rheumatism and blood poison. These deposits may get washed away and enter the circulation of the blood—responsible sometimes for apoplexy and paralysis. Third—Myocarditis, or inflammation of the muscular tissue. Fourth—Hypertrophy of the heart, or enlargement of the heart and its walls. Fifth—Dilatation, or thinning of the heart walls, making them liable to rupture. Sixth—Fatty degeneration of the heart (usually found in fat people), being of two kinds, one a fat deposit upon the heart, the other a fatty degeneration of the heart itself. Seventh—Valvular diseases of the heart. The valves of the heart are commonly diseased and a patient may not know it. The valve may leak, or not close properly. The blood is disturbed in its flow and then all the various internal organs are congested. These conditions may last for a long time without causing much disturbance. Eighth—Angina Pectoris, or neuralgia of the heart. True Angina Pectoris is a very grave disease, but false Angina Pectoris is very common and not very serious.

In addition to the above organic affections of the heart, there are many functional diseases, due to prolonged physical exertion or to the use of tobacco or to indigestion.

As there are so many heart affections, both organic and functional, some of which are serious, and some of comparatively little importance, I take the stand that generally speaking a patient should be informed of the kind of heart disease he has, for many patients with some rather grave heart disease live for many years, under favorable conditions, and I contend it is much better for a patient, although he may be nervous and easily frightened, to know that he has a malady of the heart and live a moderate life, I do not mean the life of an invalid. By care and attention to diet, hygiene and proper methods of living he is quite likely to outlive his more robust brother.

Some of the same causes which weaken the heart's action still further menace it through a premature hardening of the arteries, demanding of that already over worked organ still greater exertion in maintaining an adequate circulation of the blood.

These changes in the blood vessels are said to be due to vitiated blood, and vitiated blood is due to auto-infection, or the fouling in the blood of waste material not properly eliminated.

The waste material fouling in the blood is due to one of three causes—overeating, the introduction in excess into the system of substances such as alcohol, which are not wholly burned up and eliminated, and auto-intoxication, and may be due to faulty metabolism.

In this case the chemistry of the system does not properly take place, and waste and repair do not proceed equally. There is more waste than repair; the organs which preside over repair are not able to take care of the excess, and it floats in the blood as a foreign and poisonous substance, vitiating the rivers of life and degenerating the river beds.

Arteries become diseased, hardened and lose their elasticity; the heart finds difficulty in pumping the load, and the kidneys and liver cannot do their work properly in eliminating poisonous products from the system. Hence premature old age, disease and death.

Degeneration in old age takes place usually by two methods, I. e., fatty degeneration and calcareous or lime degeneration.

These transformations are a part of the senile process, and have different degrees of physical old age in the various tissues of the human body. Fatty degeneration thereased fat not of a healthy variety occurs in defective nutrition, and is among the changes due to old age. When fatty degeneration becomes located in one organ, like liver, kidney or heart, we have a serious disease to contend with.

Calcareous degeneration is an unnatural increase of lime deposits in the tissues of the body. These hard products of dissolution are often found as true incrustations in the tissues, and are composed of lime, magnesium salts, or of urates. Calcareous degeneration takes place in the walls of the arteries of the aged, although it may occur at other periods of life. It produces a hardening of the walls of the blood vessels, with a consequent loss of elasticity.

When this condition affects the arterioles, or the smallest arteries, especially those of the brain, they are likely to cause a stoppage or rupture of the vessel, thus producing an apoplexy and paralysis.

While old age cannot be prevented, we as physicians have agencies at our disposal by which old age may be retarded, and the symptoms of it made more comfortable.

These agencies are: High frequency electric currents (the D'Arsonval current), considerable value in testing these cases.

Measuring with the Sphygmomanometer a Patient's Arterial Tension—High Tension Indicates Hardening of the Arteries, Which Occurs Even in the Young, Producing Premature Old Age and Placing Extra Strain on the Heart.

Seated in a "Condenser Chair," the Patient's Body Is Flooded with a High-Frequency Electric Current from the "Hyfrex Coil" Machine. Medical Science Has Proved That This Current of Enormously Rapid Oscillations Restores Elasticity to Hardened Arteries.

diet and hygiene.

The earlier stages of old age are often associated with hardening of the arteries. However, many comparatively young men and women who have been living a strenuous life, or one given to excesses, have died from old age of the arteries.

It is to be seen that when the arteries have become hardened or brittle any excessive pressure in the vessel, caused by the emotions, physical or mental excitement, is likely to endanger life by a sudden rupture of a small artery in the brain or elsewhere.

Fortunately we have an instrument of considerable value in testing these cases. It is a pulse pressure gauge and is called the sphygmomanometer. It is used for measuring the pressure of blood in the arteries—how one has circulatory disturbances or heart disease they should be tested with this instrument.

An artery of the body can be compared with a flexible rubber tube used for a drop light and filled with illuminating gas. If the tube is slightly damaged or obstructed, an overpressure of gas may produce a fissure in the inner wall of the tube, or the tube may burst. However, if one moderates the gas pressure, then the tube holds good. So in the human arteries there is danger from excessive pressure.

In testing the pulse at the wrist, experienced physicians become familiar with the feeling of the quality of the artery, and can often tell if this artery has become hardened and its calibre correspondingly smaller. To make sure, however, the Spagmomanometer makes the test certain.

This instrument consists of a cut-glass bulb and upright tube containing mercury. One side of the glass bulb is connected with a rubber tube ending in a rubber hand bulb. The other side is connected with an inflatable rubber band or the whole attached to the arm over the radial artery, when the hand bulb is compressed, drives the mercury up in the glass tube.

If the column of mercury indicates 114 to 125 millimeters in the female adult and 125 to 135 in the male adult, a normal blood pressure obtains. If lower than this the vital energy must be improved, which is quite easy to do. If, on the other hand, the column of mercury indicates increased pressure, then arterio-sclerosis, with hardened arteries, is probably present, and your condition demands the advice of a physician.

If he has made a study of the subject he will suggest high frequency electric currents and a modification of diet, and hygiene.

The high frequency electric current may be taken by placing the patient in a large wire cage, which is connected with a D'Arsonval machine. Here the patient, with all his clothing on, is subjected to a dry electric bath, and is given millions of vibrations a second. The patient may stand or sit comfortably in the cage, or lie on the high frequency insulated couch, and have his blood pressure reduced without any disagreeable feelings.

This form of electrical treatment acts as an energizer to the system, equalizes the circulation, restores tone and elasticity to the arteries, improves the general nutrition by establishing a proper relationship between waste and repair, and further helps in the elimination of poisonous products of the system and stimulation of all the glands of secretion and excretion.

Some forms of high frequency apparatus will give an oscillatory current as high as 100,000,000 vibrations per second. More recently I have been using a new apparatus for this purpose. It is called the Hyfrex coil. It is made in this country and has several advantages over those of foreign manufacture. It is portable and can be attached to any electric light fixture.

In this experiment the patient feels no sensation or pain, although he is receiving enormous oscillations, and either a high or low voltage.

Other experiments have shown that by our modern high frequency apparatus we can give a patient from one hundred to one thousand milliamperes of electric current without pain. If this was given by the ordinary constant current it would be exceedingly painful, and even dangerous.

Thus, it is found, that currents of electricity which are dangerous, or even fatal, to human beings, when administered at a slow rate of interruption, may be taken through the body without danger when the rate of interruption is tremendously increased.

This can be illustrated on an ordinary induction coil. A slow interruption gives painful shocks, when we increase the interruptions the current becomes more bearable, and when high frequency is established no effect is appreciated, neither muscular contraction nor pain.

However, increased tissue changes are manifested by greater absorption of oxygen and increased elimination of carbonic acid gas.

Further, the blood vessels are dilated, rendered more elastic, and the overworked heart relieved of part of its burden.

The Beautiful City of Apollo.

building. Here was the Lernaean Hydra with which the hero was matched, that nine-headed monster who had ravaged the country of Lerna in Argolis, destroying men and animals.

But Heracles was by no means the only Greek hero immortalized upon the commanding structures of the holy city. Theseus, too, the national hero of the Ionians, son of the Athenian King Aegeus, was perpetuated in marble upon the treasury of Athens. He will be remembered as the hero of the famous combat with the Minotaur, from whom he rescued the Athenian victims. It was after he became King that he captured the bull of Marathon and sacrificed it to Apollo, then fighting the Centaurs, and carrying off Helen, sister of the Dioscuri. Later Theseus joined Heracles in an expedition against the Amazons. Upon the front of the Athenian treasury was a splendid group, showing Theseus battling with an Amazon, but unfortunately the lower part of the piece is badly injured.

When the French excavators uncovered all of the ruins of Delphi, during years of labor, they proved the truth of the statements of classical Greek writers that Delphi was crowded with statues and columns from the hands of the most gifted of the artists of all ages. Not only were the buildings adorned with these masterpieces, but at every open place, almost at every corner, were majestic statues of gods and heroes, of warriors and sages. Even the women of commanding beauty or intellectual power were immortalized in marble, and some of these statues were unearthed at almost every turn of the spade. Here was found a well preserved statue of some nameless sage, and there was the head of one who must have been a leader of men, even though no one can name his statue. Here is the figure of a woman, commanding in every sweeping line, even though the head has not been found.

According to the Greek law not a fragment of all these priceless remains can be taken out of the country, every bit being kept in the temporary museum on the ground until the largest can be re-erected upon those places on which they originally stood. Not one statue or fragment will go to Paris, much less come to the United States, but the influence of these discoveries is felt in every museum and studio through the exact reproductions of the most original and beautiful statues, which are now being made.

AND NOW SUPPOSE THE WHOLE HAREM SHOULD WALK OUT.

sibility, some wise ones say, that the women of the harems will walk out some fine day and hold a public demonstration like the suffragettes of England and the women's rights women of the United States.

All the while that political sedition has been spreading during recent years among the Young Turks a different kind of unrest has been fomenting among the harem women.

First it came in the form of books and magazines, telling of the freedom of European girls and women. When, at last, American literature, the popular magazines and the gorgeous Sunday papers began to find their way into the seraglio, then, indeed, the real spirit of revolt was inspired.

Then, for the first time, they learned that every now and then a harem slave did really escape into the great outside world, and revelled in freedom and the adoration of men which her beauty compelled.

This, indeed, kindled the smouldering passions of their Oriental natures into a flame.

The Turkish young women read with envy how girls of other nations had their friends, their lovers, their amusements, and, above all, their liberty—that glorious heritage of Western civilization; but Turkish women had none of these; nay, verily, they could not claim their own body and soul. Immured within high walls, where no sun or air could penetrate the grated casements, the world of their limited vision, as seen through the lattice-work, was but a panorama, an unreality, a dream—almost as much a dream as that other world they read of in books where happier women were free to taste of the tree of the activities of life, and so man forbade them to eat.

Ah, those books! How bitter-sweet a pleasure! By their enchantment the Turkish girl wandered at will through strange lands, felt the wind blow cool on her cheeks, breathed the air and basked in the sunshine, to awaken to prison bars and the enervating luxury of her gilded captivity.

The high intellectual culture given in recent years in the harems is responsible for discontent. Taught by European governesses, and an all enveloping veil—this was all that was needed for a woman's wardrobe.

Almost any Turk in moderate circumstances could afford the legal number of four wives. Then there was the slave market, where as many more inmates for the harem could be procured as the Turk wished or could afford.

But with the advent of the Parisian gown all this was changed. It cost a rich Turk as much to purchase a summer outfit for his favorite wife as it had formerly cost to clothe half a dozen wives with their children and all the slave attendants for a whole year.

As for the Sultan, with his enormous family, it is said that it has cost him in recent years as much to clothe his harem in Parisian gowns as it did to maintain the standing army of Constantinople and the guards of the Yildiz Palace.

The result of all this was a sudden cutting down of expenses in the Imperial harem. A lot of the less attractive and supernumerated wives were sewed up in sacks and thrown into the Bosphorus.

A Turk cannot divorce a wife according to Moslem religious law, except in extreme cases, but he is at perfect liberty to drown her when he gets tired of her.

When the Turkish women awoke to their new danger and degradation, that the favorite wives were getting all the new clothes, and that the old ones were being sewed up in grimy sacks, then the revolution began in earnest. Not a household but contained its sedition and plotting for freedom.

First, as by a concerted effort, they all struck for new clothes—and they got them. For the Turk, though a tyrant in his home, is also a coward at heart, and he knew his life was not worth a copper coin if he refused the new demands. Poison is the ever-present remedy in the hands of the harem women when the master tyrant gets unendurable.

Having been thus held up by his harem, the Turkish potentate retaliated by turning traitor to the Sultan, sold state secrets to make up the family deficit, and secretly joined the revolutionary party of the young Turks.

The situation was bad enough before the Sultan capitulated and gave a constitution to his men subjects.

Then he had to reckon with the women, and cruelly forced a manifesto prohibiting women to remove their veils in public, which caused great rejoicing.

It is believed that they are considering a plan to force the Sultan to recognize the social position of women by raising one of his wives to the dignity of empress or sultana. There has hitherto been no empress in this tyrannical empire.

If she approves this there would have to be a court circle, receptions, presentations at court, and functions like those in other European countries.

The rebellion of women against political restrictions is an idea as old as Aristophanes, in whose play the "Ecclesiazusæ," or "Female Parliamentarians," the women of Athens, disguised as men, steal into the Ecclesia, or Parliament house, and succeed in decreeing a new constitution.

Those antique suffragettes have their successors to day in the noisier women agitators of London, Paris and the United States, and finally even in Constantinople, for the revolt of women has come in earnest and is world wide.

The Photographs on This Page Are By Abdullah Freres and Sebah & Joaillier, of Constantinople.

Only lately have Turkish women been able to have their photographs taken when they wished and in the costumes they desired. The photographs presented on this page were taken by leading Constantinople photographers and are among the first which have been allowed to go out of the country with the Sultan's permission.

To cap the climax, came the stealthy introduction of Parisian fashion.

With gowns from there came the accessories of Turkish girls reducing their figures. To be fat was to be considered beautiful in Turkish eyes until a few years ago. Now the modern Turkish girl of good birth revels at this, and is going in for athletic exercises to reduce her flesh, and be slender like her European sisters.

Formerly it was the women of a Turk's harem that changed from year to year. Their dresses were the same from generation to generation.

It cost very little to fit out a new wife. A trousseau at the time of the wedding was quite sufficient to last her through life.

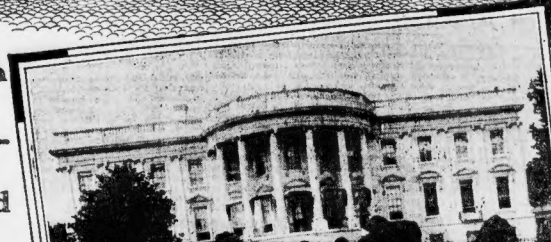
TO MAKE WASHINGTON THE REAL "SPOTLESS TOWN"

Dr. W. C. Woodward, Health Officer.

Spick and Span Outside, But With Many Foul Spots Beneath the Surface, the Health Department Is Having Microbe-Breeding Kitchens, Bakeries, Bottling Works and Laundries Cleaned Up to Make the National Capital Spotless Inside and Out.



The White House.

"SPOTLESS Town?" Where shall it be found?

Many people have imagined that, if anywhere, it was located in the District of Columbia. Is not Washington the place where women wear gayer and brighter clothes on the streets than anywhere else in the world, because there is no dust or dirt and the atmosphere is spotless?

Ay, indeed. So far as these things go, Washington deserves its enviable reputation. But how about what is underneath? It is not enough that a city shall be clean on the outside. The trouble is that, where such matters are concerned, people rarely bother themselves to look beneath the surface. Yet it appears from recent discoveries that very disgusting and even alarming conditions exist in the eating houses, the bakeries, the ice cream and candy shops, the grocery stores, and the laundries of the national capital.

The truth is, doubtless, that the same sort of conditions, equally dreadful and disgusting, exist in similar establishments in every city in the country. Nowhere are such places properly inspected and it naturally follows that in many instances they are unclean. Washington is first to take the matter in hand by probing the episode against mischiefs of the kind with an enthusiasm that cannot fail to produce results—results so obviously beneficial that in all likelihood they will inspire the authorities of other municipalities to undertake similar measures of reform.

The crusade, which has been going on for only a few weeks, has already brought to light a good many facts of which it would never occur to most people even to dream. One of these facts is that the average restaurant of good class, while clean and inviting outwardly and from the viewpoint of the customer, is on the inside, especially in respect to its culinary plant, frequently filthy and unsanitary.

Take for example one eating-house on Ninth street, in Washington. It bears an excellent reputation, and is frequented by many of the best people in the city. One of its attractions is its obvious cleanliness. But, as discovered by the health authorities, when they examined the place this cleanliness is all on the outside. They found two kitchens in the rear, both of which were in a condition for which filth would be a mildly descriptive term.

Apparently the cooking utensils were never cleaned at all—not from one year's end to the other. Occasionally they were scraped, when the accumulation of grease and other dirt on them was so great as to interfere with their usefulness. Pans employed for frying chickens—the fried chicken is a favorite dish in Washington—were half an inch thick with ancient lard and other extraneous substances.

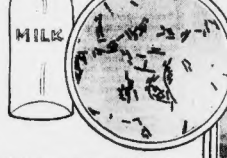
In each of these two delightful kitchens, the floors and walls of which were covered with greasy dirt, was a closet of the most primitive pattern. Seems horrible, does it not? But exceptional? By no means. On the contrary, judging from the investigations of the Health Office, such closets, similarly situated, are to be found quite commonly in the kitchens of restaurants.

People never inquire about such things. It never occurs to them to look into matters of the kind. Indeed, they have no opportunity to do so. They find everything apparently neat and clean in the eating places they frequent, and, quite naturally, they take it for granted that what is hidden from their eyes is equally beyond criticism.

In one luncheon on H street was found a cot behind the counter, on which the proprietor slept. The bedclothes were on a chair in the kitchen when the inspectors called. But this was a trifle. At another eating place on the same street was an open garbage can, obviously never cleaned, and flies were passing from the garbage to some fish that was being prepared for a customer. The iceboz used to contain all of the perishable provisions had a "putrid animal odor."

Does anybody imagine that this was an exceptional case? It was not found to be such in Washington, and there is every reason to presume that similar conditions are common enough in the eating houses, even of good class, of other cities. Even the hotels of the fashionable northwest section were found by the inspectors, in many instances, most unsatisfactory in respect to their culinary arrangements. More than one of the proprietors was threatened with arrest for disregard of the most commonplace sanitary regulations.

One of the most interesting developments, though of minor importance, has to do with cracked crockery. Of course such damaged ware is not used in first-class places, but in dairy lunchrooms and other eating houses of inferior grade a cracked mug or plate does not go out of service. It remains in use until actually broken. This is seriously objectionable, because dirt accumulates in the crack, and cannot be washed therefrom.



Typhoid Germs From a Bottling Establishment.

Such a plate or cup is never in a proper sense clean: it harbors grease and the multitudinous microbes which feed upon grease. Some of these microbes are dangerous.

Accordingly, the Health Office of Washington has issued an edict which says that "all broken and mutilated crockeryware is to be regarded as unnecessarily unclean, unwholesome, and in unfit condition for use in connection with the preparation, keeping, selling and delivery of meat, game, poultry, fish, vegetables, fruits, groceries and other articles of food—and prosecutions are to be instituted in cases where such ware is found in use."

This is, indeed, a new idea. Will the time soon arrive when in the domestic household a cracked cup or dish will be regarded as unfit for further use by reason of the microbes which it may harbor? Unquestionably, so far as public eating places are concerned, it is desirable that such mutilated ware should be excluded from employment.

Now, if only restaurants were subject to criticism on such grounds the case would be bad enough, but there seems to be the same sort of trouble, due to neglect of cleanliness and sanitary rules, with bakeries, ice-cream "parlors," candy stores, and other establishments that manufacture things which people eat.

Probably you have noticed that your loaf of bread or dozen of rolls, perhaps, is delivered at your house or flat every morning by a horse and wagon. What does this imply? Something, it is safe to say, of which it never occurred to you to think. It is merely that a bakery, for the carrying on of its business, is obliged to keep a stable full of horses. And, if you other ice cream concerns put together. On Tuberculous Germs From the Hut of a Colored Laundress.

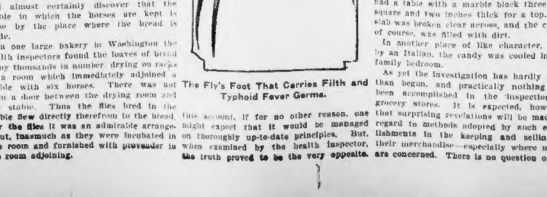
Dysentery Germs From a Restaurant Kitchen.



The Fly's Foot That Carries Filth and Typhoid Fever Germs.

It ought to be understood that every stable is a hotbed for flies. It would not be such if a few simple precautions were taken to prevent, but such precautions are almost invariably neglected. Practically all the flies that give us so much annoyance are propagated in stable filth. From the stables they wing their way directly into our dwellings, bringing more or less nastiness with them and immediately seek the food exposed in our kitchens or on our tables. They are the common carriers of typhoid fever, and it is probable that at least one out of every three cases of this dreaded disease is attributable to flies.

Hence it is that fly-screens are among the most necessary of sanitary precautions. And if this be true where private houses are concerned, of how much greater importance must they be for the protection of public eating places—especially the kitchens thereof. Yet it is a fact that restaurant kitchens quite commonly are close to stables, and are unprotected by window screens and door screens against the entrances of these filth-born and filth-carrying pests.

In Washington there is a well-known establishment, widely advertised, which doubtless sells more ice cream than all fact that these messes are often exceedingly filthy. And, in the vending of milk. It is to be feared—and is undeniably true in many instances—that the receptacles used as measures for supplying customers are never washed. When one considers how excellent a medium for the culture of germs is the accumulating residue at the bottom of a milk measure, one has good reason to be horrified.

But, speaking of horrors, nothing seems to exceed the unpleasantness commonly incidental to the making of "soft" drinks, such as sarsaparilla and the like. At the bottling works where dealers of this character are put up for retail consumption it is customary to keep the requisite flavoring extracts in huge jars. The liquid merchandise is compounded in large batches, of course, and, whenever the extracts run low in the jars, the latter are simply filled up. They are never cleaned—at all events not in Washington, and presumably elsewhere—and there is an incidental accumulation of flies, cockroaches and other extraneous matters in the receptacles.

When the extracts are used for compounding purposes they are carefully strained. It would never do, obviously, to introduce the bugs and other extraneous matter aforesaid into the bottled goods offered for sale. In this way disturbance of the appetite of the consumer is carefully avoided—which is all that is required to-house inspection of private dwellings, for commercial demands. The same idea is which shall cover the whole city, with applied to the washing of the empty bottles view to finding out cithens who maintain when they are returned to the works, the unsanitary conditions on their premises water used never being changed. When the and to correcting the same.

quantity of fluid is insufficient more is added from the tap, but it is the same old water all the time, barring necessary additions.

Thus at length Washington will be made in very truth a Spotless Town, affording an example to be imitated by other municipalities all over the United States.

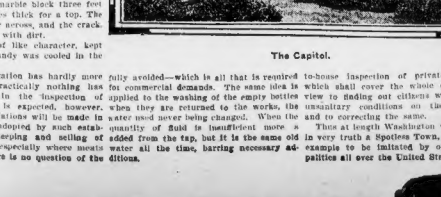
Erysipelas Germs From a Canning Factory.

All of the ice cream was manufactured in a filthy cellar, with no ventilation whatever, and in the very room where the cream was made there was a closet of most primitive pattern for the use of the help.

To understand fully the dreadfulness of this one should realize how exceedingly assortment is ice cream of all kinds of gases and odors. In a number of other places devoted to the sale of the same commodity similar conditions were found. One of them, near Thirteenth and M streets, is kept by an Italian, who is also a maker of candy. For candy-making purposes he had a table with a marble block three feet square and two inches thick for a top. The slab was broken clear across, and the crack, of course, was filled with dirt.

In another place of like character, kept by an Italian, the candy was cooled in the family bedroom.

As yet the investigation has hardly more than begun, and practically nothing has been accomplished in the inspecting of grocery stores. It is expected, however, that surprising revelations will be made in regard to methods adopted by such establishments in the keeping and selling of their merchandise—especially where meats are concerned. There is no question of the



The Capitol.

Can the Athletic Woman Be Graceful?

THE girl who goes in for athletics is rarely graceful. There are, of course, women who go in for all forms of violent exercise and yet are graceful, but they are the exception and not the rule. Fencing, canoeing, horseback riding encourage graceful movements, but a too great devotion to hockey, cricket and a great many of the gymnasium feats does not. They seem to encourage the development of muscular excrescences in the wrong place. If the back is made for the burden, then some of these young women are going to be heavily laden indeed.

It is not pretty to see maidens in low-necked frocks resembling the infant Hercules. Tremendous muscles are not attractive in women. They are too suggestive of heavyweight and strong men exhibitions.

A man athlete is often wonderfully graceful, a true descendant of the old Greek runners and wrestlers with curiously small wrists and ankles. But so often the girl who is a doughty champion at golf, at tennis, hockey, or cricket, pays the price with a too sturdy wrist or a clumsy ankle. Grace and strength should go hand in hand, and grace should not be sacrificed to giant strength.

Women are meant to be graceful and, as far as they can manage it, beautiful and attractive. Nothing will make a girl more graceful and give her beautiful movements than good dancing lessons. Little children should be sent to dancing classes as early as possible—three years is none too young to begin. Women who are beautiful dancers invariably walk well and move gracefully, while a bad dancer is generally clumsy and awkward in all her movements.

There is nothing that will make a woman so horribly awkward and ungainly as when she tries to adopt the masculine athletic gone.

Every woman, no matter what her duties are, should take daily exercise; but it should be the right kind of exercise—not violent, muscle-swelling, unsightly exercise but the kind that tends toward womanly grace and beauty.

NO MORE PRIMPING?

WHY THE VERY IDEA!

And the Fair Sex of Georgia Rise As One Woman to Make Life Miserable for the Luckless Legislator Who Proposes a Law That Will Send to Prison Any Maid or Widow Who Lures a Man Into Matrimony Except By Her Natural Charms.

The Famous "Feminine Wiles and Blandishments" Bill.

"THIS GLENN PERSON WOULD CONDEMN YOU TO PERPETUAL HIDEOUSNESS."

REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE G. GLENN, OF GEORGIA.

"HE WOULD STRIP AWAY THE INNOCENT DECEIT OF ALL THAT PROVES YOUR WOMAN HEART."

A BILL to be entitled "An act to revive and put in force the British act of Parliament adopted in the year 1670 relating to the wiles and blandishments of women upon the unsuspecting males of this State"; to make the same of force and effect in the State of Georgia and for other purposes.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the State of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same, that all women of whatever age, rank, profession or degree, whether maids or widows, that shall from and after the passage of this act impose upon and betray into matrimony any unsuspecting male subjects of this State by scents, paints, powder or perfumes, cosmetics, waters, artificial teeth, false hair, Spanish wool or any other kind of wool, iron stays, corsets, pads or padding, hoops or high-heel shoes, V-cut waists, lingerie, lace, variegated, drop-stitched or rainbow hosiery, or by any other deceitful means or artificial practices, shall incur the penalty of the laws now in force against witchcraft, sorcery and such like high crimes and misdemeanors, and that the marriage, upon conviction, shall stand null and void.

Section 2. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed.

SUPPOSING you are a marriageable maid or widow, plain, fairly good-looking, or even pretty and charming of face and figure, and you crave attentions from members of the opposite sex, with a view to ultimate marriage, believing wifehood and motherhood to be your true vocation—

And supposing that, thanks to innate artistic instincts, easy access to bargain counters, dressmakers and drug stores and to painstaking practice with the various articles of your dressing table, you are able to create the illusion in the masculine mind that you are a handsomer lovelier than nature made you—

And by these innocent means you have reached the point where you can safely count on leading the man of your choice to the altar—

And then, supposing some monster in masculine human shape gets a law passed by the Legislature of your State forbidding you, on pain of imprisonment in a felon's cell, to powder your nose, or use a bit of rouge on your cheeks, or wear a switch, or pad out your hips or bust, or lace to your waist, or wear openwork stockings and peekaboo shirt waists—in fact, forbidding you to primp at all, or in any way disguise your natural shortcomings?

"What! No primping? Why, the very idea!"

That's what you would say when you'd caught your breath.

That—and much more—is what the marriageable maids and widows of the State of Georgia are saying, for a member of the Legislature of that State has had the incredible audacity, the creeping, crawling, undorhand, despicable meanness to introduce just that sort of bill!

Thank heaven it isn't a law yet, and never will be while the voters of Georgia continue on speaking terms with their wives and daughters!

This most audacious bit of proposed legislation, the full text of which is printed on this page, was introduced by Representative George G. Glenn, of Whitfield County.

What Georgia women think of it is pretty well summed up by Miss Jessie Partlon, one of Atlanta's most attractive and vivacious young society women, on another part of this page.

What has Representative Glenn to say for himself and his bill? A Georgia editor refers to him as "a certain statesman whose name, we imagine, will be execrated for all time by the fair sex of his native State." Mr. Glenn is about forty-five years old and married. He stoutly disclaims the influence of any personal experiences on his act as a legislator. Here is his argument:

"When I went sweethearting twenty-five years ago it seems to me that women were less made up than they are now. Their dress was simpler, and artificial aids to make themselves alluring were not in such common use as now. In those days a man knew what sort of a woman he was marrying. He knew she was real, and he made his choice without his imagination being worked upon by the enticing devices which are used by women at present.

"A man ought to be sober in his choice of a woman who is to be his wife and the mother of his children. But how can any man be sober when looking at a woman as she arrays herself in these days? I defy any man to look on a woman arrayed in a sheath gown and keep his head straight. Nothing can keep him from 'rubbering.'

"The Lord only knows how many men have been precipitated into matrimony without due consideration by the rainbow stocking. And the girls who wear rainbow stockings and other seductive lingerie always allow the men to get glimpses.

After one glance at that ankle, arrayed in a rainbow stocking, do you suppose a man is in a frame of mind to consider matrimony judiciously?

"Another device that takes an unfair advantage of a man is padding. Many a woman makes herself up to look like Venus, and ardent man, caught by her charms, rushes to the altar with a made-up goddess. That is not fair.

"I believe that my bill will make for happy marriages. I am convinced that the divorce courts are largely filled to-day because of the devices of dress that women employ to lure men into matrimony. How do you suppose a man feels when, allured by those feminine devices, he sends a woman to the altar, only to find that he has been legalled by a rainbow stocking, a V-shaped corset or a cunningly placed pad? If these devices are barred women will be sought for what they are, there will be more happiness in the married state and the divorcements will record fewer matrimonial failures."

But it is said that Representative Glenn has become a changed man in the few weeks that have elapsed since the introduction of his "blandishments" bill. He himself declares that his sights have been made sleepless and his home life marred by the quantities of letters he receives addressed in feminine handwriting.

Supposing, though less revolutionary, are two bills introduced in the Louisiana legislature. As there seems no likelihood that they will ever become laws, their titles sufficiently describe them. One is called:

"An act requiring old maids and bachelors to either marry or adopt enough children to direct their attention along useful and proper lines."

The title of the other is:

"An act to make it a misdemeanor for any man to kiss his own wife or any other man's wife on Sunday, and providing a penalty therefor."

In Kansas the enforcement of "dine laws" is causing unexpected inconvenience and annoyance to both those who believe in "dine laws" and those who don't.

Think of a man starving for food and not being unable to buy it because the blue laws had closed every store and hotel in the town!

What a condition of affairs when this man could not buy a street car ticket to take him away from this town, could not hire a livery rig or a motor car to transport him to another town where he could eat and drink!

A still more miserable condition prevails when it is known he cannot call up his friends fifteen miles away on the long-distance telephone and ask them to come and get him, because the telephones won't work as it is Sunday and the operators are off duty.

Such, however, is the situation at Iola, Kansas, and may be the same for several Sundays to come. The blue laws are being enforced with a vengeance at Iola, a town of 25,000 in the heart of the gas and cement belt of Kansas.

A month ago the women of the town went before the city council and demanded all drinks and "unnecessary things" be put under a ban and not sold on Sundays. They wanted street cars stopped and liverymen enjoined from hiring out rigs.

The city council, being in accord with the other law-abiding sex, the women got better and passed an ordinance providing a fine of $25 for every man and woman who worked "unnecessarily on Sunday." This being a rather broad law it was construed to mean every kind of work. Anyhow, it was known to include a man-jority of the mercantile establishments, so the merchants got together and decided to give the town the full benefit of the doubt and close everything.

Telephone companies, street car employees and railroads, being in sympathy with the merchants, joined them in their crusade to curtail activities. And now some of the wives of the reformers against the double reformers is on to the bitter end.

Thus who were responsible for the original ordinance are now wishing they had worded it differently so as to include only the ice cream and soda pop venders, dry goods stores and such.

As it is, Iola cannot:

Bury its dead on Sunday.

Ride on street cars or hired rigs of any kind.

Buy newspapers or magazines.

Get its mail.

Use telephones or telegraph wires.

Eat at hotels or cafes.

Do any kind of manual labor or buy anything at all.

Iola being a town with a big payroll, a where thousands of men are paid off at the cement mills and gas wells every Saturday night, Sunday is their day of trading. Sunday, in fact, is one of the busiest days of the week there, or has been. Since the crusade went into effect all this trade has been going elsewhere, minature stores have been set up outside the city limits, and all kinds of drinking and fighting prevail in these camps.

At any time of the day a cannon can be fired down the main streets of Iola and not hit a person. People busy enough to keep them over Sunday and stay in their homes during the whole day. It is impossible to go anywhere unless one owns his own horses and buggies or autos. Some of the wealthy class who own rigs and autos and have drivers have been forced to hitch up their own teams and harness their own cars in order to take the customary outing.

Accidents having happened at the cement mills on Sunday could not be attended to by any one in Iola on Sunday, and when a big explosion occurred in one of the cement mills surgeons were called by long distance telephone from another small town.

How long this state of things will be permitted to continue it is hard to say, for one side is as stubborn as the other. Never before were blue laws so broadly interpreted and enforced.

Of course, in a instance, legislation is a huge success because it is of the kind approved by the women. Any law that promises to keep their husbands and sons at home has their support.

"The Feminine Wiles and Bland'shments" bill in the Georgia legislature, however, attacks woman's dearest prerogative, and therefore probably has not the slightest chance of becoming a law.

What an Atlanta Girl Says About It.

By Jessie M. Partlon.

MR. GLENN, of Whitfield, Ga., feels hates himself? He has a grouch on, a good, old-fashioned, kick-the-cat, upset-the-salt-barrel and tear-up-Aunt Jerusha's-white-geranium spencil.

He is the patriotic statesman who introduced a bill in the Georgia Assembly to protect poor men from woman's allies.

Whatever did you learn it all, brother? What! Dropstitch hosiery, the proper kind of pads, the rose that fades when you kiss a maiden's cheek and other mean frivolities are not taught in the public schools!

Listen, Sweet Things, that make the Summer resort worth while. And you, too, dear Home Staying girls, who make the desert loam blossom like a crimson rambler in your frilly duffiness and hipless up-to-the-minute figures.

This Glenn person would condemn you to perpetual hideousness. He would strip away the innocent deceit of frills, and bloom of youth, acumelle and blond puffs bought by the yard, all that proves your woman heart.

The bill provides that if any woman, maid or widow, shall betray into matrimony—mark that phrase, my sisters—any unsuspecting male subject of Georgia by scents, paints, powder or perfume, cosmetics, artificial teeth, false hair, iron stays, corsets, pads, hoops or high-heeled shoes, low-cut waists, lingerie lace, variegated, dropstitch or rainbow hosiery, the marriage shall be null and void.

Oh, heavens! Are the male legislators of Georgia so bereft of feminine relations? Where was this Glenn person's mother, wife, sister, or, as we must be a bachelor—grandmother? Suppose she had worn V-cut waists, girl cousins, sisters or even half sisters, that they did not completely hide with a pillow before the perpetrator of such a bill on Southern chivalry and American common sense?

Dear Mr. Glenn, let me whisper a word in your legislative ear. It is the business of every normal woman to get married.

To do that she must be pretty—or reasonably so—have a tolerable figure, a fairly good complexion and be attractive.

As long as men demand prettiness in their wives so long will women be beautiful—if they have to buy beauty to the shops.

It is the law of supply and demand. Yes sirree! I'll sit out a dance in a cockpit corner with a girl whose complexion looked like tanned leather, whose figure resembled a bag of oats tied in the middle, and whose dishwater-colored hair lacked a gnostic.

No, sir? Not if you knew yourself you wouldn't?

Strange as it may seem, other men are like that. They demand lace hosiery and pink cheeks and false hair and peekaboo raiment. Men just love to be deceived.

Do you think a scrawny, ugly woman with all the virtues of Cornelia and the brains of Minerva could catch a husband?

If this bill should pass the world would be an infinitely uglier place than it is now. Fancy the fate dames of Georgia going around in costumes modelled on the famous Asbury Park bathing suits—up to the chin, down to the feet, gathered all around and made of thick, impenetrable flannel!

HOW JAPAN TRIED TO CONQUER U.S.

Storming the Forts of the Golden Gate, California.

Banzai!

The War Between Japan and the U. S. A.

"THE captain of the Danzig requests you to send a man aboard to conduct us through the mines to the harbor of Manila," said the German from the small boat to Lieutenant Parrington, on the deck of the little U. S. gunboat Mindoro, once belonging to Spain.

Lieutenant Parrington stared and answered:

"Mines! What mines! Americans are not in the habit of barring their harbors with mines, except in war times."

Now it was the German's turn to stare in amazement and repeat, "Except in war times." Then he asked incredulously:

"Really, have you no mines out?"

"But you are at war," he burst out as the American smilingly shook his head, "for six days you've been at war."

"With whom, may I ask?"

The German's face turned red, and with difficulty he controlled himself to say: "I think things are too serious, Lieutenant, for you to joke with us who have just run the blockade with contraband of war, and are therefore entitled to consideration and to be conducted through your mines."

Thus through a friendly German blockade runner came the first news to Manila that Japan had been at war with us for six days and had been blockading the harbor. Six days before a Japanese steamer had entered Manila and reported that a great earthquake and tidal wave probably accounted for the breaking of the cable that morning. Since then hardly a ship had entered the harbor, though many had left. The Japanese steamer anchored close to the old monitor Monadnock.

As the German and American officers conversed, a black cloud arose over Manila harbor and a reverberation like distant thunder interrupted them.

Blowing Up the "Monadnock."

Colonel Prettyman called to them from the dock: "I have just reported the news by wireless to Manila. Of course they won't believe it."

"Then, by heaven, you have made a fearful blunder," shouted Parrington. "That Jap steamer alongside the Monadnock has wireless. She caught your message, of course. She has blown up the Monadnock doubtless with concealed torpedo tubes. That explains the smoke and explosion."

The wireless soon clicked confirmation in port. The Monadnock had blown up and gone to the bottom mysteriously, and the Jap was leaving the harbor, as were other vessels.

"This is no time to argue," said Parrington, sternly. "I am going to stand out to meet that Jap and sink him. We can at least revenge the Monadnock."

The little Mindoro left the wharf rapidly and approached the Jap.

"No warning—no word," said Parrington. "Let us strike in Japanese fashion." Then, to the gunners:

"Open fire with the forward gun."

A white jet of smoke spat from the six-pounder in the bow of the gunboat. The shell bounded from a wave and made a hole at the water line of the steamer amidships. Strong arms loaded and fired. Holes appeared in twenty places in the hull and smoke leaked through two rips in the stack. Then suddenly white vapor gushed from every aperture of the Japanese ship. She settled by the stern and sank.

In such manner the first cowardly blow was struck in true Japanese fashion at Manila, and our only real warship wiped out, and thus was vengeance taken.

For days and days the American gunners stood by their guns, hoping the foe would steal in and give them a chance to fight. But, instead, they kept far off on the horizon, and at last it was learned that the blockading fleet were only old cruisers, gunboats and armed merchantmen. Japan's real fighting ships had been busy ambushing our fleet and convoying the invading army to San Francisco.

In those six days of war, while Manila suspected nothing, what had happened elsewhere? Our entire Pacific fleet had gone to the bottom with Admiral Sperry; Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and the whole Pacific coast had fallen into the hands of the yellow foe.

A quarter of a million Japanese were hobbling the ground already won and moving along the Southern Pacific Railroad, preparing the way for the million and a half men which were arriving in daily instalments on squadrons of transports from Japan.

Japan holds that it is a tactical error to declare war. Her method is to surprise her enemy in time of peace and make the nation helpless before it knows anything is happening. At Port Arthur Japan struck without declaration of war, but she fell upon us without a whisper of suspicion that the war cloud was on the sky.

Sudden Attack On Our Fleet.

Our great battleship fleet had divided into two parts. One half steamed leisurely back to the Atlantic coast, while the other remained in Pacific waters. The Pacific fleet was executing manœuvres in two squadrons, one under Admiral Sperry and the other commanded by Admiral Dayton.

In the gray mist of dawn Admiral Sperry's ships, with guns loaded with blank charges, encountered a strange fleet. "Can this be Dayton's squadron?" the officers ask each other in amazement as the ships rapidly approach.

They are led by two monster "Dreadnoughts," which are hastily recognized as part of the Chinese navy, which nobody knew had been sold to Japan. At the same instant the Iwami, the Suwo and the Shikishima are made out. While the American officers on the bridge of the flagship Connecticut are training the glasses on the ships a dozen flags flutter out from the gigantic cruiser Yokohama, and the turret guns turn leisurely to port and bear on the American vessels.

On every one of the strangers the turrets move in the same way, and, almost at the same instant, flame belches from each of the oncoming ships.

A twelve-inch shell puts the forward turret of the Connecticut out of action. Another kills a lieutenant at Admiral Sperry's side. For an instant paralysis reigns on our ships, then Sperry shouts:

"It is the Japanese—the enemy surprising us in the midst of peace. God give me a clear head to think."

Then followed rapid orders, ejaculations, the range was given out, signals flown to absent some sort of battle formation. The crews were called to action. Keys to magazines were hastily sought, and the precious minutes rolled by.

The Japanese fleet, at close range, blazed with flame all the time, for not a gun of large calibre had yet been fired from our fleet, and not yet a yellow man had fallen nor a gun been silenced.

"At last," groaned our Admiral, as the after turret of the Connecticut launched a shell against the broadside of the foremost "Dreadnought."

A besetting fire commenced all along the American line. But it was too late; the battle was all over before our first shot was fired. Admiral Sperry made a running fight, but one after another his crippled ships were caught and sunk.

The Americans believed themselves in a nightmare—this sudden attack in the midst of peace—but, following their Admiral's example, who went down with his flagship, all the larger ships refused to strike, and sank with flags flying. A couple of destroyers escaped, and, fleeing to San Francisco, discovered, too late, that this city was in the hands of the yellow men.

Japanese Revenge for Portsmouth.

It was Kamimora's squadron that had made the treacherous and successful assault. The flags our officers had seen fluttering from the flagship before it opened fire read:

"Let us this day have revenge for Portsmouth."

Not one man in a thousand in the United States knew that every Japanese blamed America for Marquis Ito's empty-handed return from Portsmouth.

While Kamimora was sinking the last of Sperry's ships, Togo, with a more powerful collection of vessels, was stalking the unsuspicious Dayton. Togo was less fortunate in his treachery than Kamimura, for he sighted a wireless from the American ships, and came in sight of Dayton about dusk in the evening.

A general engagement at this time would result in the escape of some of the American vessels. So Togo had to hold off till morning, taking a slight risk of discovery and suspicion.

An hour before daylight Togo sent in his torpedo flotilla. The first news our ships had that there was such a thing as an enemy in the world was the explosion of torpedoes against the sides of six of their ships.

Dayton's men came to their senses in time to sink four of the Japanese destroyers and drive off the others. But on the heels of the torpedo craft came Togo's battleships, with big guns blazing. Six of our ships were sinking before a gun had been fired, and again the battle was over as soon as it had started.

Surprised and hopelessly outnumbered, Dayton's armadron was crumpled up and sunk by Togo's gunfire.

Behind each of the Japanese squadrons was a large convoy of transports. The two fleets and their transports effected a juncture that night and steamed for San Francisco.

While Togo's ships were steaming at top speed for the Golden Gate, the tip spread about the country that Dayton in his manœuvres was off the Golden Gate, waiting for a thick night to sneak past the forts and capture San Francisco.

A Japanese steamer came in, and her captain goodnaturedly told the harbormaster that he had seen Dayton's squadron lying motionless about thirty miles out to sea.

The gunners at the forts prepared their blank cartridges, and nobody had time to wonder why the Japanese steamer was so busy with her wireless and was sending so many boats from the shore.

On board the Japanese fleet there was prayer to Japanese gods of war to send fog and rain, and in the subterranean crypts of the new Chinatown of San Francisco the same prayer was uttered by three hidden regiments of the Mikado's men who were resting on their arms, arrayed in uniforms of the U. S. A.

On the Japanese steamer Lieutenant Shimoto glanced at the heavy fog coming in response to the yellow men's prayers, and scornfully remarked that apparently the white men's God of Battles hadn't been notified of the war yet. The fog came in thicker and thicker, and behind it came Togo.

The Enemy Hidden in Chinatown.

For two weeks Japanese in the neighborhood of San Francisco had been leaving their work quietly, going to the city and there disappearing, as did the Japanese inhabitants. Where did they go?

Down under the streets of the new Chinatown lay the answer. There they collected and armed themselves with great stores of rifles and ammunition, collected long in advance, and donned United States uniforms.

Late at night came the booming of guns down the coast. The few people of San Francisco who heard the sound guessed it was Sperry caught trying to land at Lime Point. As a matter of fact, it was Togo's transports landing their men in the face of a fire of blank cartridges.

Soon there were reverberations nearer at hand. Togo's battleships were passing the Golden Gate, saluted by the harmless thunder of blank cartridges from the great guns of Fort Winfield Scott. With them came more transports, which steamed across to Oakland and landed their men at and near the Southern Pacific Railroad pier.

A policeman, sheltering himself from the rain in a doorway, heard the tramp of marching men hurrying from the direction of Chinatown.

"Hello!" he called as the procession came in front of him, "what's all this about?"

Japanese Soldiers Pulling Trains Loaded With Siege Guns On the Southern Pacific Tracks, Because Many of Our Locomotive Engineers Escape

Remarkable Book Pre
Our Fleets Will Be D

JAPAN'S coming war with the United States, which the great majority of European statesmen and military authorities believe is certain to occur within the next year or two, has been forecasted step by step in a new book entitled, "Banzai!"

Like nearly all military works, the book is written by a German, who hides his identity under the name of "Frankelium." It is hinted in Berlin that the author is an officer who enjoys the confidence of the Kaiser and that the book was practically edited by the Emperor himself, and is virtually his warning to the United States to prepare for war. If so, it is not only a warning, but an assurance that Germany will be our friend in time of need.

The war is to break out next year without a whisper of warning. Just as the Russian ships were surprised at Port Arthur before war had been declared, so our Pacific fleet will be attacked and sunk in the midst of peace.

How quickly and easily the whole Pacific Slope could fall into the hands of the yellow men and how ruinously difficult it would be to dislodge them is made clear in startling detail.

In the following translation of certain parts of the book the military technicalities convincing to experts and the diplomatic details which tied the hands of England and France have been largely omitted.

But against Seattle the Japanese used a brand-new naval weapon—a new mortar boat designed especially for the capture of this city. Japanese coolies, who worked so cheaply for us in the construction of the mortar batteries high up above the range of guns of any battleship, had, of course, reported it accurately to their government.

So Japan built six strange-looking craft, which had the appearance of whaleback oil tanks, with guns

Just as the transports bearing them entered ... harbor they are furiously attacked and sunk by two ... gantic and mysterious battleships of the Dreadnought type. Whence had they come? Remembering the days of the Alaska, the American people ask, "Can they have come from England?" They have ... years two enormous ships had been in process of construction at an English shipyard for the Brazilian navy. Many had wondered why Brazil could desire such monstrous means of war. The truth was that the ships were destined for Japan. Upon completion they had been sent to Brazil, there quietly sold to Japanese agents, manned by 2,000 Japanese sailors, who a short time before had come to Brazil in the guise of emigrant coolies, and promptly dispatched north on their mission of destruction against the transports bearing the American troops from Cuba, Porto Rico and Florida to Cavite Christi.

The disaster is followed by the total rout of General McArthur's army at Hilgard, in the Blue Mountains, after a terrible struggle in which even Moslips take part.

Canadians and Australians Enlist.

The situation is now desperate. Yet in the hour of need America is cheered by the knowledge that the entire white race sympathizes with it. The British colonies—Australia, Canada, New Zealand—disgusted at the attitude of London authorities, openly allow the enlistment of thousands of volunteers for the American army. Ultimately the British government begins to draw back from Japan. There upon an uprising breaks out in India. At once England is forced to turn her entire attention to safeguarding her interests there. As Japan had foreseen, she can extend no real aid to the Americans.

While the latter are slowly coming to a realization of the meaning of this terrible rout at Hilgard the Japanese conditions of peace become known. They are as follows:

The States of Washington, Oregon, Nebraska and California to become Japanese territory, yet to belong still to the Union; their territory to be occupied by Japanese garrisons and thrown open to Japanese immigration. The strength of the Japanese garrisons to be determined later.

One-half of the members of the Legislatures and municipal bodies in the States occupied by Japan to be Japanese, the other half Americans.

If these conditions are granted, Japan agrees that no Japanese immigrants shall be allowed in the other States of the Union.

The United States to pay Japan $2,000,000,000, together with which the contributions already levied in the Pacific States by the Japanese are not to be reckoned.

San Francisco to be the port for the Japanese fleet on the Pacific, a naval dock and the arsenal there to pass into Japanese hands.

The Philippines, Guam and Hawaii to become Japanese property.

A cry of fury is the answer of the American people to these proposals. In spite of the protests of some citizens, who prefer the protection of business prosperity to the maintenance of the national honor, it is decided to continue the war to the bitter end.

Once more Germany comes to our aid, and at last England, seeing her rival Germany making handsome profits from the sale of contraband of war, offers to do likewise, but receives cold response from us.

From every white nation of the earth come volunteers and aid of various kinds. Once more an American army moves to the attack. The losses are even greater than the sickening slaughter of the great armies of the Russo-Japanese War, but in a day and a night the Americans turn the flank of the Japanese and inflict a crushing defeat.

While the Japanese are in rapid retreat the news comes of the sinking of a Japanese squadron off the Falkland Islands. The tide has turned. America now has a slight advantage on both land and sea, and Japan's army is entrenched in the Rine Mountains of Oregon.

While this army was advancing under General McArthur, it was planned for another American force to attack the yellow men from the rear through New Mexico and Texas. For this purpose the brigades stationed in ... were waiting for the troops from Cuba, ...

THE PRETTY ROMANCE OF TWO SECRET MARRIAGES.

When "Mutual Consent" Has Broken Their Engagement, Behold! She Marries Another Man Secretly, and Now He, a Philadelphia Society Man, Is Revealed as the Clandestine Husband of a Pretty Photographer's Model.

"Posing as a model for newspaper photographers."

Mrs. J. Harold Winpenny, who was Miss Beatrice Reiley.

WHEN Mr. J. Harold Winpenny [illegible] some [illegible] of Philadelphia it was [illegible] expected that he would [illegible] for the act is out of the [illegible] vied man, and has been for [illegible]

Also for several months past it has really been no wish of person as Miss Beatrice Reiley that name [illegible] discarded in favor of Mrs. J. Harold Winpenny.

What the secret dropping [illegible] of their pretty romance scattered [illegible] cast, it would be safe for those two people and [illegible] to declare, on finding [illegible] the homes of the [illegible] parents, that for [illegible] they became [illegible] acquaintances.

Hearing [illegible] news [illegible] pin society [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] and think [illegible] the newspaper [illegible] when a [illegible] claims.

As the [illegible] deed, by "mutual consent" [illegible] Harold Winpenny and Miss Sprague's [illegible] engagement [illegible] was [illegible] out [illegible] their [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] loved another.

For Miss Bess Sprague was the heroine of that other secret [illegible] which, if it [illegible] a light [illegible] to have much angered her family, though the happy husband is Harry Stiness, son of a former Justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island.

But Miss Sprague was of an even more distinguished family. She is a granddaughter of the famous war Governor Sprague and of Kate Chase Sprague, the latter a daughter of Salmon P. Chase, who was Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Early Summer [illegible], however, with [illegible] about the time that Mr. Harold first met secret [illegible] and [illegible] Reiley's [illegible] other fell ill with [illegible] decided to place him in the hands of [illegible] and went along as his companion and [illegible] [illegible] he would make a [illegible] bride of [illegible] marriage story on his [illegible]

The beautiful secret bride went with [illegible] to spend the Summer at a [illegible] place near Philadelphia—where the [illegible] was when the secret was accidentally revealed.

Who was this Miss Beatrice Reiley, who [illegible] out to be the seven or eight months' bride of Harold Winpenny? Well, she is one of the prettiest young women who ever served her pin money posing as a model for newspaper photographers. Her father has been connected with the Philadelphia banking firm of Charles D. Barney for [illegible] years.

Little Miss Reiley was so pretty, in fact, so dainty and so engaging in every way, that it was a foregone conclusion that sooner or later the stage would claim her. That's what the stage did—

"She made a picture that Mr. Harold found it quite hopeless to attempt to resist."

She became a member of the chorus of a Japanese musical comedy playing at a Philadelphia theatre. In her costume and "make up" as a maid of the Mikado's realm, she made a picture that Mr. Harold found it quite hopeless to attempt to resist.

There are some tales of proper little [illegible] governed, of course—after the [illegible] and vague stories of automobile [illegible], huge bouquets and boxes of candy.

And then, all of a sudden—it was last December—little Miss Beatrice suddenly discovered that she didn't care for stage life after all.

She left the company. One of her girl companions of the chorus knew more than words to tell about a quiet trip Miss Beatrice made to New York.

"Did she go alone?"

Oh, that's telling!

Finally her mother was with her?

"Probably you can ask all the questions you please, and get the wisest."

However, there was a quiet little journey to the metropolis. It is said that about that time Mr. Harold was missing from his customary Philadelphia haunts for rather more than twenty-four hours.

Perhaps [illegible] [illegible] of a dozen of handsome [illegible] Philadelphia and as pretty a girl as you ever saw, standing with serious [illegible] before a surplieed reverend gentleman in [illegible] a book, you will not be far wrong about what occurred during that little visit to New York.

Back in Philadelphia, going their separate ways, demurely on her part, gayly unconcerned on his part, so cool upon their casual public meetings that bolder wouldn't have mocked in either of their mouths—that was their cruel fate for at least seven long months.

How could Mr. Harold's lack of courage stand the strain? Had ever an adoring young husband greater incentive to truth telling and facing the parental music?

The bride did not long keep her secret from her own parents. Confessing everything, she was freely forgiven, and on one side it was a case of "Bless you, our children."

Right here one may indulge a shrewd guess that this one-sided parental blessing afforded many consoling opportunities and was perhaps the very means that reconciled the young husband to clandestine domesticity, so far as his own people were concerned.

And when he was called away to Europe

"What occurred during that little visit to New York."

with his brother there was [illegible] occasion for hurrying a confession. It could wait well wait until his return. And then there was time for the chapter of accidents to develop which would make that ordeal unnecessary.

The cat being out of the bag presently, the bride's father's lips were opened. He said:

"My wife and I knew all about the marriage a few days after the ceremony had been performed. There is no doubt that they will be very happy together. Winpenny is a fine fellow, and I have always said him. I suppose the young folks will go to housekeeping soon after Mr. Winpenny returns from Europe.

What the J. Bolton Winpennys will say about this is probably held in reserve until Mr. Harold has come back with his belated confession.

"Some people felt a bit sorry for poor, handsome Harold Winpenny."

came of Miss Sprague's secret [illegible] to Mr. Stiness [illegible] people felt a bit sorry for poor, handsome, young Harold Winpenny. But he made no signal of distress. He continued to walk the [illegible] path of an engaging young Philadelphia bachelor—and only just now [illegible] it become known that since some time last December he was walking that path under false pretences. He was a bachelor in some only!

True, there were a few who knew [illegible] the lady who was a maid in name only, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reiley and Harold's brother, Marshall Winpenny, they kept their knowledge to themselves until such time [illegible] Mr. Harold should [illegible] upon [illegible] to break the news to his father and mother. Mr. and Mrs. J. Bolton Winpenny very important society residents of North Broad street, in Philadelphia.

"An ostensible bowring acquaintance."

Who Make the Best Husbands?

GIRLS not out of their teens are apt [illegible] to scorn the idea of marrying [illegible] quiet, staid young man, the fellow who plods along like a cart horse at the same pace every day. They prefer somebody whose brilliance is shown in every word he utters. It is just possible that the quiet young man will make the best husband in the world. Of course, he may be stubborn or stingy, and unable to earn more than a small salary. But, other things considered he ought to make a reasonably good husband.

Then, there is the man who rides a hobby. He is either an adorable husband or a perfect nuisance. It all depends on the wife's point of view. Some women like to see their husbands around the house as much as possible. Others prefer that while [illegible] to the large affairs of life [illegible] of the way at some as much as possible.

The summer care is the amateur carpenter's [illegible] life of furniture; [illegible] of flowers, who is never so happy [illegible] in the garden with wife [illegible] new expert he is with hoe [illegible] and he cook lover, whose ill-[illegible] to favor spoil.

Of the [illegible], the lover of books is the one likely to find the least favor in a wife's eyes, unless she shares his tastes. For books don't cost a lot, in a world of [illegible] one man not quiet, unless she be of kindred spirit.

Then there's the homely young man. He is likely to make a very good husband. Should he chance to marry a pretty girl, he will be so grateful to her for nothing [illegible] that he is likely to be her slave and admirer for life, ready to gratify her every [illegible]

How to Become a Good Long Distance Swimmer By Using the Proper Strokes

BY A SWIMMING EXPERT.

LONG distance swimming [illegible] the most popular [illegible] and when [illegible] early August to nearly the middle of October most [illegible] are either at the sea, river or lake and [illegible] not interested [illegible] especially in the [illegible] to tests of endurance.

Some may [illegible] to be indulged [illegible] will see in it a [illegible] taken without [illegible] again with [illegible] sport, particularly [illegible] Marathons that [illegible] door season, while [illegible] athletics will help [illegible] protecting and saving [illegible]

This interest [illegible] quite recently [illegible] distance swimming [illegible] men and women who [illegible] five or more miles in the water could have been counted on one [illegible] Now people are beginning to [illegible] swimming as a physical [illegible] getting to know the possibilities of [illegible] out into the open, and [illegible] to master the [illegible]

Above all, they are becoming aware of the great number [illegible] than [illegible] in distance swimming [illegible] from a [illegible] death. The latter, probably more than anything else, has urged upon [illegible] the development of the sport.

Unfortunately, lack of understanding of the proper methods to attain success, coupled with mistaken ideas, greatly hinders the progress of the [illegible]. The object of this article is to correct erroneous views and, by showing where to [illegible] faults, enable the reader to map out for himself a system that will prove satisfactory.

The first question that presents itself to [illegible] candidate for distance honors after he is the best system. But if there [illegible] has mastered the early [illegible] strokes [illegible] he is to cover the speed stroke [illegible] better than the breast, the back or any other [illegible] a step further concerns the best type of old-fashioned ones. With the same output of strength you will go twice the distance [illegible] will be, for they are speedy in the water, and when long practice [illegible] have gained, and when long practice [illegible] you consider [illegible] swim as well as the other [illegible] good [illegible] stroke [illegible]

There is not much to be chosen between the trudgeon and the crawl, but time will come when more [illegible] will be, for they are speedy in the water, and when long practice [illegible] have gained, and when long practice [illegible] you consider [illegible] swim as well as the other [illegible] good [illegible] stroke [illegible]

The trudgeon is an overhead two strokes it is bound to prove best for [illegible]

All manner of swimming

After all, [illegible] modern strokes are [illegible] result of evolution and have come [illegible] through years of study of the problem of [illegible] how to develop the greatest possible speed [illegible] out of the least expenditure of power, and it is but natural that the latest [illegible] is the best, and that [illegible] stroke provides a [illegible] over the others [illegible] to one mile [illegible] ability on longer journeys, provided [illegible] be modified to meet the distance [illegible] course of [illegible] ard to cover [illegible] at the pace [illegible] mile racing [illegible] the latter must be acquired through [illegible] experimenting. No coach can tell you [illegible] as well as you can tell you [illegible]

This is the reason that at the first appearance of the trudgeon and then of the crawl every one put them down to sprinting strokes impossible to hold over distances.

Judging of pace has won many endurance races, both on land and water, than actual speed, and therein lies much of the secret of success in distance swimming. Nicety of timing of your stroke very carefully [illegible] you will eventually form a definite [illegible] of the kind of stroke that you can hold indefinitely after you have found your second wind, and that is the stroke you want to hold.

The position of the body is another all important matter in distance swimming, and this modern stroke affords a far more comfortable one than the old ones. In all three of these mentioned one lies comfortably on the water, without a particle of strain on any part of the body, and by a slight twist of the head from the shoulders as the body rolls, the balance is kept unbroken all through.

Proper balance insures comfortable and fast swimming, for swimming really is nothing but a question of balance, and if the centre of gravity is upset by lifting the head to breathe, as one has to in all the early strokes, the legs sink and trail and the body checks immediately.

THE MAN WHO STOLE THE EARTH

Most Thrilling Novel of Love and Adventure Since Jules Verne's Masterpiece.

By W. Holt White.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

The King of Ballonia, who has a place at Cook's in Thomas' where he is known as Mr. Meek, enters Jorne, is shot at from a launch by an enemy of his enemy, the King of the Spirenians. Mr. Jorne escapes, and himself shoots one of the men in the launch. The affair is witnessed by John Strong, son of Sir John Strong, who comes across the river, pondering on the deadly intent of his friend, Joe Langley and Miss Hunt are willing to aid him. Princess Diana, daughter of the King of Ballonia, and for a time how he becomes of Langley's sensitive, he means to become master of the earth. The King of Ballonia is a flying machine builder. Joe Langley is his great scientific friend. Strong engages Miss Hunt, of the Daily Wireless, and on her promise to make nothing public for the present, to let her all about his plans to steal the earth, to convince her about the airship he takes her on a short trip.

Miss Hunt asks an interview with the King of Ballonia and refuses to talk to his secretary. Her real purpose is to deliver a "pocket wireless" cloth to the Princess Diana. She needs it for her mission and returns to London, where Strong authorizes an interview in "The Daily Wireless," declaring that he is ready for the conquest of the earth.

Strong takes counsel with his lieutenants on details of the attack on Ballonia, and presses Billingham's work into service.

All being now ready to launch the new war airship "Victor" from the Crystal Palace, Strong makes a final inspection of it and narrowly escapes assassination by Prince Ludwig.

PART II.

HE AND Arbuthnot then walked back to the shed.

When they reached it Strong told Arbuthnot to keep the door, but himself went within, and, climbing into the Victor, sat down in the well.

The hours passed slowly, but presently dawn broke, and then Strong, alone into the shed the light of a bright Autumn day. At 8 o'clock Langley came.

To him Strong said never a word of what had taken place. Arbuthnot, however, informed him in hurried whispers, cautioning him, however, to say nothing to Strong.

Later came Pelham and Sidney, and Strong ordered breakfast to be brought to them in the shed.

By now he and his old, flight-hearted self, and he laughed and chatted of all things in the world except the great expedition which was before them.

The announcement that Strong's mysterious aircraft was to attempt her flight at three o'clock had for a week been bruited everywhere. Flaming placards announced the fact in the street corners. Black type filled it in the newspapers. The news was on every body's lips.

By one o'clock the Palace grounds were already packed with people. Taking every precaution, the authorities at the Palace had not ordered the closing of the gates. Instead of these held, two deep, the ones nearest the shed on great green open space about the shed. On the east side, on the terrace of the Palace, a huge grand stand had been built. At one o'clock these were crowded to their utmost capacity.

The terrace of the Palace was thick with people. The windows of the restaurant were jammed with them. So far down as the old gold ground every inch of space was occupied by men, women and children, who, after the manner of great crowds gathered together, swayed gently to and fro.

About the ring the constables were hot, hurried and half exhausted. The pressure against them was enormous.

At half-past one it was necessary to telephone urgently for a reinforcement of police—not only a reinforcement, but large reinforcements.

Never, indeed, in the memory of any man, never indeed in the record of English public events, could such a crowd be remembered. The roads leading to the Palace had been blocked with vehicles for hours; the railway officials were in despair. Trains were jammed to bursting. People sat on the racks, on each other's knees, and stood six deep in the centre of the compartments.

And still the people came.

A hundred fresh constables came streaming down the slopes, and fought their way through the crowd to the ropes. To a certain extent this relieved the strain on the constables who had been there all the morning, and they succeeded in thrusting back the crowd a little.

Strong, standing bare-headed and debonair on the lawn, turned to Miss Hunt, who was by his side.

"Do you know, Miss Hunt," he said, "this reminds me of that famous scene in 'Alice in Wonderland,' where the Oyster went for a walk with the Walrus and the Carpenter? 'And thick and fast they came at last, and more, and more, and more.'"

Miss Hunt looked anxiously about her. Even with the added forces of reserves, the police were having an extremely unenviable time. Slowly but surely the crowds around the ropes were forcing the constables back.

"If they do not look out," said Strong, surveying the harassed policemen, "it will be a case of 'Charge, Chester, charge!—with but me."

He broke off with, "If we wait for the appointed time," he said, "we shall be crushed to death. Those fellows cannot hold out much longer. I am sorry to break my arrangements with the management of the Crystal Palace, but I propose to consider the safety of the Victor and our own precious lives first.

"It is a little past 2, and if we are not off before the half hour it will be too late. We will get the ship out now."

He turned about and gave his orders. Two of the shed doors were flung open and the Victor was run through on slips very similar in construction to those from which the last balloon had ascended at the back of the bungalow at Cookham.

As the shimmering hull of the Victor was run into the sunlight a great roar burst from three hundred thousand throats.

The crowd swayed backward and forward, and then swayed forward again. The great wave of humanity struck and shook the hollow square of constables. The policemen reeled and then braced themselves and with almost their last gasp forced the crowd back again.

Yet still over the hill and up from the valley were streaming thousands upon thousands of late arrivals.

Strong jumped into the Victor and, climbing to the afterdeck, looked quickly all about him.

"It's a question of minutes," he called to Arbuthnot—"of seconds. Into the ship with you, Langley, into her quick! And you other fellows, climb in, too."

"Now, Miss Hunt, come along."

He leant over the side and took Miss Hunt by the arms and literally lifted her from her feet into the Victor, then sat her gently down in the well.

"Arbuthnot, sit here. Pelham and Widmer, get forward."

He looked quickly over the airship and her passengers. Then he turned to Langley.

"All clear?" he asked.

"All clear," said Langley

Langley for his part sat with the sweat running down his face and his eyes blinking fiercely behind his goggles. Behind him his hands, pale and trembling, hovered over the keyboard waiting to release the Victor.

Strong stepped him on the back. "Pull yourself together, old man," he said, "or those big ears of yours will flop off."

He took a more strong look at his watch and took one more rapid look about him.

"It's impossible to hang out till 3."

He pocketed his watch, and the time was twenty-five minutes past 2.

"My heavens!" he cried, "we are in for it."

The line of constables ahead of them was broken. Half a dozen policemen were lying on the ground and the crowd came surging over them.

"Up!" he shouted to Langley, "up!"

Langley's hands flew to the levers.

The great propellers at the stern and at the prow of the Victor began to whirr softly and she ran up the switchback-like slips.

She reached the propellers began to whirr, cutting the air with the noise of a thousand rapiers flourishing in the sunlight.

"Up, up—for heaven's sake, up!" shouted Strong.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Off for the Seat of War.

THE crowd now had broken in, not only before them, but on either side of them. Screaming women and shouting men were hurled against the sides of the slips. The constables were but as broken reeds.

Strong and the others felt the Victor quiver as the crowd surged against the slips. With a shudder Miss Hunt heard the nasty scrunch of human bodies being crushed to pulp against the slips. Then went up, up, up, up swifter than any bird.

Langley alone kept his eyes at the keyboard; the others hung over the sides of the airship. They saw the crowd crush together in the space which they had leapt from, and heard the cries of the wounded men and wounded women as they were crushed and ground against the sharp steel sides of the slips.

Below them the roar of half a million voices sounded like the roar of breakers on Chesil Beach.

With a rather grim look Strong took Miss Hunt gently by the shoulder and drew her back from the side of the ship.

"Don't look," he said; "we shall have enough of this sort of thing before the end of the chapter. It is very, very nice to see, but there will be worse."

Miss Hunt turned about and looked him full in the eyes. Her face was rather pale and scared.

She stood for a moment or two clenching and opening her hands.

"Mr. Strong," she said, "this is horrible. I suppose I did not quite understand, when I undertook this business, what I should have to see. It is horrible."

Strong looked at her closely. He had never possessed much faith in women. Would this particular woman fail him now?

"I am sorry," he said, "but these things, you know, must be."

Miss Hunt spread her hands wide apart.

"But is it right?" she asked. "It seems to me that you are going to bring immense misery on great numbers of people, and, so far as I know, with no definite object in view."

"So far as I can see at present," said Strong, "you are quite right. I am not quite sure what the definite object will be, except one thing—and that is the Princess Diana."

He paused and then added: "I think she will show me the way out."

"At any rate," he went on, "I am convinced that I am right. There is not an incident in the whole progress of the world which did not ultimately result in good where men saw their purpose and carried it through."

Miss Hunt looked at him with wide eyes.

"Yes," she said, "I think it is quite true."

"Anyway," said Strong, with one of those smiles which brought him allegiance wherever he went, "do you think I am such an unutterable villain that I am not to be trusted if I enter my campaign with the loss of a few lives?"

Miss Hunt looked into his face and sighed. "Yes," she said, "I think you are to be trusted."

This little conversation Strong and Miss Hunt had quite to themselves. Pelham and Widmer were still forward; Arbuthnot was still hanging over the side staring back at the Crystal Palace; Langley was intent upon the machinery.

Strong shook himself and took out his watch. It was half past two.

"What do you reckon," he said to Langley, "that you can get out of her?"

"Two hundred miles an hour," said Langley.

"Which means that if we go as the crow flies we shall get to Lagos—when?"

"As the crow flies," said Langley, speaking as one recites a formula, "the distance is 1,040 miles—say, five and a half hours."

"Five and a half hours," said Strong, more to himself than to Langley, and he ticked off the time on his watch. "That means that we shall pick up Lagos at 7 30 o'clock's run due west will bring us to the Aphrodite. That is half past eight."

Then he spoke aloud to Langley. "My dear boy," he said, "that is much too early. If we pick up the Aphrodite at half-past eight we shall certainly be observed.

"I do not want for myself, but we cannot possibly be. Jane Bellingham. I suppose we must have to trifle in the novel occupation of thinking about the clouds?"

All this time Langley had kept the airship stationary dead above the Crystal Palace. The earth spread below them like a map quivering with the throbbing of the Victor, caused by her whirling propellers.

Then Arbuthnot broke in.

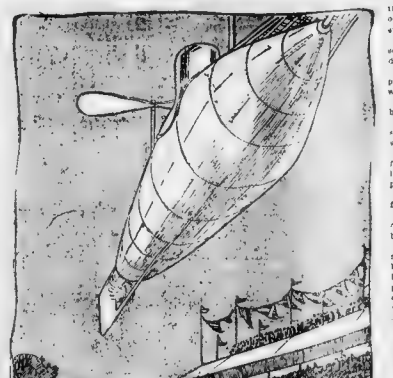
"Tell you what, Strong," he cried, "let's pick up Paris on the way. It's a bit of the route, but it seems to me that we have time to spare, and as those jokers down below see now theft we have started, there is no reason why Paris should not see us, too. Paris is the centre of the earth so far as I am concerned, and who is to say what route we may take to reach it?"

"I am afraid," said Strong, "that we are not counting on the telegraph. If we are seen going southwest we shall be presumed to be en route for the southwest, and that will create suspicion

"But I will tell you what we can do," he added; "we can take a run round Paris and then jump out of sight—at any rate, as far as human observation is concerned."

Langley looked up at Strong. "Is that what you want?" he asked.

"It will do," said Strong. "Go ahead."



"Below them the roar of half a million voices sounded like the roar of breakers."

Once more Strong looked over the side. They were at an altitude of 3,000 feet, and the world below them was dim and distant. None the less, he could see the Crystal Palace came to distinctly and rang unpleasingly in their ears

"Southwest be it," said Strong

The Victor's bow and stern propellers began to whirr, and they plunged forward.

Now this was entirely different traveling to ballooning, where the wind never ruffles one, because the balloon must go with the wind.

The wind was to the southwest, and they were cutting into it. The force of it brought tears into Miss Hunt's eyes as she faced it squarely.

The wind, indeed, was whistling past them like a hurricane. Strong cast an anxious eye at the steel supports which held the lifting propellers.

"You had better slow down a bit," he said, "or we shall carry away, and then there will be an end of us and all our hopes."

Langley paused himself as one stirring in his sleep.

"Eh? Ah we yes," he said, "what a fool an aligned scientist can make of him self. I be sure, honest, I had forgotten the wind."

"Well," said Strong, "we cannot whistle through it at much more than a hundred miles an hour, so long as it is against us, which means that we shall either have to ascend or descend to lack for a clearer stretch of atmosphere."

He looked over the side, and the waters of the English channel lay beneath them almost like glass.

"Let's get over," he said, "and we shall look down——"

The Victor, under Langley's hand, dropped a point, and a wave of wind struck the side. Miss Hunt gave a startled cry. It spread itself in a moment or two in the waters of the Channel would swallow them up. Then, as Langley set the Victor steady, there came that sinking sensation which one experiences when an express lift is stopped suddenly.

The English Channel lay only 500 feet or so beneath them, and, the day being Saturday, the Downs were full of craft.

Immediately below them the evening mail packet ploughed her way through the placid waters.

They could hear the cries of those on board as they were observed.

And then came to them a new sense—a sense that in their present situation the world was of no account.

The world to which Strong and his friends had fallen back captive by the laws of gravitation became to the sidded a plaything.

An expression of the general feeling came from Pelham.

"Good heavens!" he said, as he looked downward, "we can waits all round the blessed old globe"

By some common instinct Miss Hunt and Strong looked at each other. Miss Hunt looked at Strong because she wondered if he realized the position which Pelham had put into words. Strong looked at her because he had realized the possibility and wondered if Miss Hunt could see that he appreciated it.

Their eyes met and they looked away.

They were over dry land again now, skimming across the roads at the back of Deppe.

Langley, without any guidance, started for Hasten.

"Just for a joke," said Strong, "let's steer round the cathedral."

They dipped again, and Langley slackened speed. They skimmed cosily over the high peaked roofs of the old houses of Hasten.

They almost scraped the towers of the cathedral, and a roar of wonder from the town came up to them, and they could see the crowd in the market place away to and fro in wonderment.

They shot out again across the Sea Another hour and they were over the outskirts of Paris.

"Dear old Paris," said Arbuthnot, looking over the side. "Dear old Paris, I'd like to stop and have a stroll along the Rue de Rivoli and over Pont Neuf to the Latin Quarter."

"If dare say you would," said Strong, "but such a stroll is not for us to-night."

Then Strong had a sudden idea.

"To-day," he cried, "is the 1st of September. It four days' time Romberg Basil exhibition. When I am master of the world I shall be one of my brilliantest days. The Arc de Triomphe shall be the——"

"—end of my victories. And Paris is one of my victories. And I shall be able to look up now, be avenged! I'll chalk it up now"

Langley at the steering wheel looked at them as though he did not entirely comprehend.

"Arbuthnot," said Strong, "shall be our guide. Let the speed down to twenty miles and drop the Victor just above the boulevards."

"Where," added Strong to Arbuthnot, "is the Bois de Boulogne?"

"Just to the right of the Hyde Park of Paris with his forefinger.

"Now, my friend," said Strong to Langley, "give me a trick at the wheel." "Ah, certainly," said Langley, "but though she works like the 'Ole she is a bit more sudden in action"

"All right," said Strong, "all close beside you and we——we must go on."

Strong let the Victor down at an angle, making for the Bois de Boulogne. The Arc de Triomphe lay right ahead.

They could discern a great hubbub in the Champs Elysees. Vehicles of every kind were drawn up sharply. The boulevards swarmed policemen stayed their chatter; dogs, and then across Caseres and over the famous battlefield of Rubidan, and so across the deserted airport of Etampes to the sea at Lagos, with its [illegible] and its white-faced houses and [illegible]

"Now," said Strong, "as we have pleased ourselves, let us go to sleep."

The Victor was left at 2 knots an hour, and the sky grew [illegible] Strong [illegible] and the waters [illegible]

"If we [illegible] past 6 o'clock," he said, "we shall be [illegible] Langley, my friend, and doubt overstep the mark."

Up to then there had been [illegible] reaction. All were so oppressed by the novelty of their surroundings that they had been unable to find their tongues.

But now they regained their voices and were loud in their marvellings of the powers of the Victor

They hung for a little while in space while Strong consulted and holding a quick debate with himself as to the precise course that he should now pursue.

Presently he looked round and said, "There is no necessity why we should approach the Aphrodite Bellingham was kind enough to hang about for us off Lagos to ease the Victor. He not come up to Long Ley's hopes; and had we not with a break down or needed attendance or repairs, the Aphrodite would have been a great rate base.

"But apparently the Victor has at vices even Langley's hopes. Indeed it seems to me that she is perfect"

"Perfect," said Langley, "the [illegible] keep clear of the Aphrodite the better for Bellingham and all concerned. Our exposure will be rushed all over the world by [illegible] and we do not want to drag poor old Wim into this business sooner than we need."

"But," protested Miss Hunt, "we cannot leave poor dear Bellingham in the lurch forever to hang about here and wonder where we are."

"My dear Miss Hunt," said Strong, "I never proposed to do anything of the kind. It was agreed before we started that we should get into communication with him by wireless at about 10 o'clock. THE summer girls are coming to town—that of course is one to the City of New York. "Some in rags, some in tags—or rather their linen is mostly rumpled. Their white teeth gleam and their skin is brown. Some there are to silk and ruffle. Never a wrinkle and never a crease. But there are the pale-faced fall ones. Not even their noses are sunburned—but beware of the frown. Better wrinkles in your linen than a boxplait between your eyes.

Just look and see! It's only mid August, but the Summer girls are coming to town from Newport, Southampton and maybe Bar Harbor. Look for the girl with wrinkles in her linen, but smiles on her face, for she's the Summer girl who will be the Autumn bride. Father is delighted. Both his smile and his purse expand, and Betsy Brownface, you may be sure, starts in directly to spend.

Now listen. When August is sixteen days old then the time has come to divide the Summer girls into two classes. In one class belongs the girl whose finery is still fresh. She may be one of the mural blossoms from the wall covered with the Summer [illegible] her linen frocks need no cloth around the head. No "lobengrin" mars for her the still. buying. The failures (the mural blossoms) have come to town to buy the gayest and the latest for a desperate effort in the last lap of the season. Girls of this sort always depend too much upon clothes. They are even keyed up to the point where they will get into a sheath with an unlilled slit.

First thing, the Summer girl will ask, "What are the new colors?" "Cuisse, wisteria, eggplant and donkey gray" is the answer. As usual, the majority of the new colors have edible names. They always call in the French chefs for the christening.

And the sweet Summer girl, how she laughs and dimples when she sees some of the new Fall suits from Paris! All the suits she likes best are military in character. Take the suit of a soft, but bright, sky-blue broadcloth (figure D). See the big buttons. Each has a sapphire in the centre. Many of the buttons on the new Fall suits are very valuable. Some are not with semi-precious stones. The importers rarely tore out their hair when they heard that these buttons had to come in under the head of jewelry. When mother and the girls come home from Paris their new suits in the trunks are, however, buttonless. "Buttons, buttons—who has the buttons?" is the latest game at the customs house. Mother has the buttons, but who is the man who dare say where? Some of the new buttons are really mussel shells. I saw them on a new suit of eggplant color. But please excuse me; we must hurry back to the blue suit. But buttons are awfully fascinating. We had to stop and discuss them a bit. That's the only enjoyable way to talk about the styles. Sequence, as I tell Cholly, is a nuisance. Buttons are really of great importance, much like the punctuation marks in a poem, or, as Cholly says, in your great aunt's will.

So this blue suit the buttons are military. Then, just see the slit on this central gore, drawn from costumes seen on the ladies, no one sees it in old French plays. Where the skirt folds back the lining is of armure silk. Two little plaits give a scant bit of fulness to the skirt just below the waist. The long tails of the coat have narrow stapling straps and buttons also applied to a soldierly way. The cuff sleeves again have buttons, strong and a narrow lace frill from the elbow down and daintily circling the wrist. The revers on the soft finet are braid to on a soldier's of the soft blue cloth and those on top changing a bit loosely of gold on white mammoth orchids in shades of pink and mahogany are white edged. The skirt clasps the hips, and is one of the most severe of the [illegible] walking suits. You cannot see the [illegible] of the coat when it [illegible] But Betsy Brownface looks [illegible] in it. She is [illegible] dainttily circling the wrist. The revers on and trig, and as [illegible] at as a colonel

The second great [illegible] of headaches at this time is fatigue. We do not rest and sleep as much as in Winter. We sit up late and get up early in the morning. We do too much, when we are on a vacation, because we like to get just about three times what we should into the twenty four hours.

So we become fagged and tired and head achy, and we blame the Summer. We play tennis in blazing sunshine, with the idea that we should get as much exercise as possible. Of course we have to pay. The marvel is not that so many women have headaches—but that we manage to escape the attacks of sunstrokes they often deserve.

Heat headache is the direct consequence of not protecting the head, neck, and upper part of the spine from the sun's rays. A broad-brimmed hat and a parasol are essential for the woman who has to go out in strong sunlight, however free from vanity she may be.

Women who "feel the heat" should make a point of lying down in a dark room for thirty or forty minutes in the middle of the day. And the woman who gets nine hours' sleep summer and Winter will be the healthier and better looking for it.

As Summer headache is sometimes due to eye strain from the excessive light, it is a Sensible Ways to Avoid Summer Headaches.

THERE are women who complain that they are never well in hot weather; they feel out of sorts, have severe headaches, and are easily upset—and they blame the weather. They say they always suffer from "Summer headaches," but they do not seem to realize that it is not Summer but their own stupidity that is at the bottom of it all.

There are four main causes of illness in hot weather. The first is diet. Foods spoil more easily in Summer, and people are very liable to mild attacks of food poisoning from eating meat or fish that is not quite fresh.

Sick headache may result from even one mouthful of tainted meat or fish, and overripe or under-ripe fruit is the cause of a good deal of illness at this time of year. Housewives are strangely ignorant, or strangely indifferent, to the risk of food contamination in hot weather. It is false economy to use meat or fish, or food of any kind that is at all suspicious.

Everybody should eat less meat in Summer, and choose instead good fruit, salads, eggs, milk and cheese. Such foods as pork, heavy puddings and fat meat of any kind are liable to cause headache if taken in any quantity at this season. Why? Because it is more difficult for the system to get rid of excess of food when it is not required for purposes of body heat and heavy work. So, in holiday time especially, reduce the amount of butcher's meat and "heating foods."

"Comic Sleuths Better Than Some Real Ones" Says Jameson Lee Finney

"I BEGAN TO THINK AS THOUGH I HAD STOLEN THE SOUTH PYRAMID, I SAID, CAN THIS OFF LAY THEM AWAY GO."
"THE PROFESSIONALS ALWAYS SUSPECT THE SERVANTS" MATCH
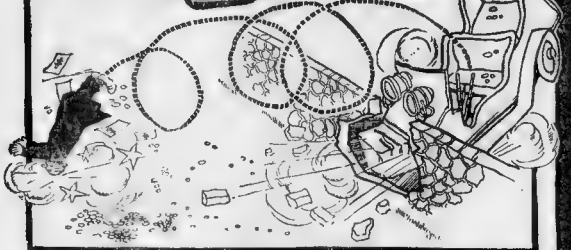
"AH! THIS MATCH HAS BEEN LIGHTED, I SAID AT ALL."



A YOUNG MILLIONAIRE SUDDENLY PITCHED OUT OF HIS AUTOMOBILE LANDS INTO THE YARD OF A DETECTIVE, WHO, COMING TO THE DOOR IN RESPONSE TO A DOUBLE BARRELLED, THREE ALARM, 60 HORSE POWER DETECTIVE ALL IN A SECOND.

"HONEST, as a comic detective I think I'm about as good a sleuth as some of the real ones. But don't tell the headquarters men."

So says Jameson Lee Finney, the farce-comedy Hawkshaw of "The Best Man."

The plot of the new comedy which opened the present season at the Majestic Theatre and which is having a good run there, is permeated with good-natured satire at some phases of modern detective work. The fact that the play is frankly a farce comedy and that the lines and situations are on that order tends to relieve the satire of much of its sting. At the same time there is many a pin in the play to prick the bubbles of inflated detective reputation.

And Finney, as "Carroll Dempsey," the young millionaire who suddenly turns sleuth to win a girl's affections, is having a whole lot of fun showing how to be a near-detective.

"Of course, the real detectives will pooh pooh everything I have to say," continued Finney. "They are bound to. Any amateur detective is bound to resent the jealousy of professionals. For the matter of that I guess the actors haven't got anything on the detectives for professional jealousy. We all know what a bit the amateur actors make with the regular actors, mostly backward.

Wants to Be Real Hawkshaw

"But I have always been rather interested in detective work. In fact, that partly made me like this present production. You know that in 'The Stolen Story' there was an element of detective work, the discovery by Billy Wood of the punctuation joker in that franchise. Every star reporter, like Wood, has to be something of a detective. In fact, from what I have seen of newspaper men's work—and I know a big bunch of star newsgatherers they're in this town—they are a first-class detective ability in their make-up. In any quantity of crime investigations you will see where the reporters, without the badge, club or authority of the police, have gone ahead and dug out clew after clew, merely as part of their day's work. It's good 'copy' for them, of course.

"Well, in 'The Best Man' I have some comic detective work and some genuine sleuthing mixed up together. Maybe I'll land in a play some day that makes a genuine Hawkshaw out of me, who knows?

"But to get back to our comedy sleuth. He isn't so bad a detective in the end as he might be. Of course you can't expect a young millionaire like Carroll Dempsey suddenly pitched out of his automobile over the garden wall and then into the home of a girl whom he loved on sight, but who won't love him as himself, to be a real, double-barrelled, three alarm, sixty-horse power detective with a high speed gear all in a second.

"So, what does he do when he decides to swap places with Betterton, the real detective, on short notice? Why, he makes a stuff that is simply dazzling in its elegance. He is led to the scene of the break. He sees the litter of burned matches on the floor. And, looking as wise as a tree-full of owls, the near-sleuth sagely observes that the matches have been lighted.

On the Trail of Former Vale!

Finney lay back in his chair and chuckles to himself. The scene a little first act of "The Best Man" to which he alluded is a comical one and invariably makes the audience laugh.

"But seriously," continued Finney, "many of the regular detectives get carried away with the idea in the first place that they must make a big showing right away. They keep too much to the surface and don't look underneath. That is what ails Betterton in the play. He gets obsessed with the idea that Hunter, the butler, must have stolen the pearls because Hunter not knowing Betterton was on the detective job, gave himself away about playing the ponies. Herein the ingenuities of detective intellect reasons as follows: 'Butler—gambles—jewels gone—butler took 'em—lock up the butler.' It's as clear as mud to Betterton, see, but for the comic detective, myself, poor Hunter would be jugged before nightfall.

"After a moment of silence the star of 'The Best Man' began to smile and the smile developed into a grin.

"I did not say that I was twice a sleuth as real sleuth, but I can't say that I carried the part through to the finish, though. The first time I trailed a man I innocent him, but became so sorry for him that I ended all my amateur work.

"The man I was after was a former valet. In a desperate fit he eloped with some of my Winter clothes, particularly a fine fur coat. I traced the chap and he put up a bluff that he had sent all the things to the tailor to be pressed, cleaned and put away. I found that wasn't true so I went to police headquarters, secured a warrant and had the man up in Jefferson Market court.

Lost Fur Coat in August

"I had Edward Lauterbach to push along the case for me. Things began to go very gloomy for the valet and then I found out that he was likely to be sent away for a stiff sentence. Then the chap's friends got after me and painted an awful picture about my ruining a man's life for a first downward step. I began to feel as though I had stolen the stuff myself. So I went to Lauterbach and says 'Call this off. I get the stuff back. Let the man go.'

"Lauterbach volunteered the opinion that I was a dunce of a client or words to that effect and said that just or most take its course. 'Never mind Justice,' says I, 'you get busy and fix it up.'

"Lauterbach fixed it up somehow and the valet was let go after a talking to that sobered the spirits nearly out of him. I remember, too, that when I first went to police headquarters to talk about the goods the captain asked me what was missing and I mentioned my big fur coat. I was a sizzling hot day in August and I guess they thought that a man who would fret about a fur overcoat in that weather must travel far for his worries.

"The next time I started out on the gumshoe trail I was a comic all right. It was in the Summer. I was laying off at a country place and they put up a big country fair. I was put in charge of the Midway shows, with explicit instructions to see that no undesirable or dishonest exhibits were permitted. I was also cautioned about side show performers, who would fool the public by intimating that they had some very naughty entertainment inside when they didn't have it at all.

"As near as I could figure out my job, I was to get after any show that was offcolor when the proprietor said it wasn't and also to spot any show that wasn't to the bad when the 'barker' shouted that it was. I was after 'em going and coming, so to speak.

"Stung" at Country Fair

"Things went along pretty well till the big day of the fair, when I found a chap insinuating and plotting to the open disgust of the native. He was up to something he didn't dare to say much about, but just see for yourselves, and all that I disguised myself with a bucolic straw, a dinged-over hat and shoes as harmless as pinafores. Then I went up to the boss of the show, laid him off on the place, and on his show and took him before the executive committee for trial and judgment.

"Well, that fellow made a mess out of me. He denied that he had intimated anything and he dished me to prove it and so made a fearful roar about the money he was losing and he also was shut up. His last yelp was true, too, for the show was crowded and the natives were out to spend money.

"But the executive committee didn't tell the fellow to go back and open up his show again. So he mooned out, with a final yowl about being 'stung' through my fault. After he went and the committee pulled me about and finally let me go, I was called in again to recompense him for the injustice and the great wrong I had done to his show. And they put it up to me to take the money to him.

"I was game, however. I took the ten spot and got to the fellow's show just in time to hear him announcing through a megaphone: 'Ladies and Gentlemen, I have just been arrested by the committee on the charges that my show was too advanced for your town. Ladies and Gentlemen—need I say more?' and the way the bunch broke for the ticket-seller was a caution.

"Gives the man his ten dollars? Sure I did. I like nerve when I see it.

"Do I like detective stories? Always read 'em. I went through all of Gaboriau's that I could find. When Conan Doyle began his Sherlock Holmes series I was right after them. And I must say that I liked them better than Gaboriau. Lecoq, the French detective, put in infinite patience and ingenuity for detail and hard work, but it's the Holmes method and his theories of induction and deduction are more fascinating. They may be overdone, of course, but Doyle does make an entertaining story.

"I think that Anna Katherine Greene's stories are absorbing, too. One of the first I read was 'The Leavenworth Case.' I admire the way she seems to work up an absolute case against a person by means of circumstantial evidence and then wipes it all away in three lines at the psychological time.

"I think that Grace Livingston Furniss, the author of 'The Best Man,' could write a first class detective story. The elements of mystery that she had hinted in her semi-comic vein the present play show ability to frame up a consistent detective work.

But don't Carroll Dempsey a pretty fly sleuth before the play is over?

Finney chuckled again to himself. "He makes a decent mess of things at first, I admit. That's all right for the comedy part. But he makes a master stroke when he discovers that the burned matches have not been used up but have merely been lighted, then blown out and thrown on the floor. This bit of work reveals to Dempsey that the litter of matches is the purest kind of a bluff. You notice, it makes Betterton, the real detective, open his sleepy eyes in a second.

"Hawkshaw—That's Me"

"Of course old Longacre put the motive there to cover up his own tracks and I, as Dempsey, the supposed detective, off the trail.

"In short," Finney said prophetically: "I feel as if growing more and more into a detective. I don't I even shoe around and make people like a tin badger! Don't I accuse an disguised in a false mustache? Don't I get next to old Longacre and make him confess? Don't I get sentimental stuff from one end to the other. And don't I land the jewels and the girl and win the bet and put it all over Betterton? Am I a sleuth? Well, I should say. You may hear of me turning up as a regular Hawkshaw some day. Yep —Hawkshaw, that's me."

Tom McCarthy of the Doves

PITCHING FIND OF THE SEASON

IT'S not often that a ball player jumps into popular favor with the fans right off the reel, coming into their midst without any great reputation, and yet this is what little Tom McCarthy of the Boston Nationals has done.

Boston Nationals has done.

It was only a month ago that this pigmy twirler was playing with the Pittsburg team, which club was glad to let him go, together with another pitcher and a catcher, the whole outfit being traded for "Little Cy" Young, who had outlived his usefulness in a Hub suit, and the Smoketown management thought it was getting the better end of the deal.

With McCarthy came Harley Young, known as Cy Young III., who was in an entirely different class from his comrade, as a test of the pair proved. Now Young has been sent to a minor team and McCarthy is a baseball idol.

McCarthy made good from the start with the Doves. At Pittsburg he did not get a show alongside of the other regular staff artists and his ability was never known in the Smoky burg.

The sawed-off curve flinger decided that he had been knocked around among the big teams just enough, and began to soar upward as a reliable slabman.

It was in the Eastern League that McCarthy began to shine, playing on the Newark team under Manager Burnham, and Cincinnati, of the National League, was the first club to see some valuable points in the youngster, and he was drafted by the Reds. This was early in the season, but he suffered from a sore arm and could not do himself justice with the Reds, who were only too willing to sell him to Pittsburg, and from there he came to Boston.

McCarthy's case is similar to that of a lot of others, where a good player has been allowed to stagnate for want of sufficient service. Had Pittsburg given the lad the same show that President Dovey has done he would be a member of the Pirates now. They did not have much use for McCarthy because his arm was not in working order, and they did not have the patience or time for him to recover the proper condition of his wing.

McCarthy comes from Fort Wayne, Ind., where the lamented Chick Stahl lived, and he early developed as a ball tosser, going to the Mt. Clemens team of the Michigan League and from there to the Northern League, in Canada, and that experience developed him for the big company he was to travel in later.

Such an ambitious young diamond warrior is bound to succeed, and McCarthy has stuck to his purpose to be a star pitcher in spite of his size. His pugnacious determination to advance in the pitching ranks is ever present when he is in action, and nothing can stop him from climbing the ladder of fame if his arm holds out.

One of his chief assets is the use of the spit ball, which he acquired about two years ago, and has perfected the puzzling throw till he has mastered it, and has depended on it for the greater share of his victories.

When a young player jumps into the Eastern League and makes an impression it is an indication that the right kind of stuff is in his makeup for future development, as there is no stiffer course, and it is either make or break for the individual.

When the big major leagues are looking for talent, it is the Eastern body they cast their optics on and scan the records of those who show promise, and that is how McCarthy came roaming into his present field.

While with Newark last year he won eighteen out of thirty games, having a better record than Burchell of the Boston Americans and Foxen, the recent acquisition of the Philadelphia Nationals, who is making a sensation.

Since joining the Boston Nationals McCarthy has faced the hardest teams on the circuit, and his biggest triumph was defeating the team which traded him to Boston on their own grounds. If he can keep up the gait he has displayed, it is certain that at the end of the season he will be in the top rank of pitchers.

It is wonderful where McCarthy gets all his ability, on account of his size. He is about the same height as Dygert, the New Orleans flinger on the Athletics, who is the midget of the American League, but has tremendous back muscles, which is a feature of McCarthy's makeup. While he does not weigh over 150 pounds, he is all muscle and bone, built up from the ground with a well-knit frame.

In action he fails to go through the many motions of some of the prominent twirlers, and his windup is simple in the extreme compared to some of the weird antics of loose-jointed athletes.

He gets the ball away without any apparent waste of power, depending on speed and cutting the corners of the plate to fool the batter.

His steadiness in the box is characteristic, as he makes it a point never to pass a man unless it is policy to do so.

THOUGHT!

What IS thought? How do we think, and WHY? Do we [illegible] our thought, or does our thought create us?

Is thought voluntary or involuntary? Can we think [illegible] into being bigger and abler mentally, or does our thought express an unchanged [illegible] condition, as the roar of the tiger or the chirp of the cricket expresses an unchanged [illegible] animal condition?

We invite our readers to look at this picture, which represents human thought upside down—the monkey with the human face. Discuss the question of thought with your friends to day, and study your own thought AS YOU THINK. We shall discuss this matter with our readers on this page next Sunday. How and Why a Railroad Paid Fifty-eight Millions.

A Truthful Narrative That Demonstrates the Result That Can Be Achieved by INDEPENDENCE, Whether in Journalism, Politics or Private Life.

Copyright, 1908, by American Journal Examiner

By giving a check for $2,939,651, the Central Pacific Railroad yesterday discharged the last part of its indebtedness to the United States Government, which at one time amounted to $58,812,715.—New York Press, July 29, 1908.

(The following account of an event important to all Americans is written by one well acquainted with the facts stated, one who lived in California and took an important and aggressive part in political life throughout the period under discussion.)

Almost at the very moment that the representatives of the Central Pacific were handing over their check for the last instalment on the Central Pacific debt to the United States Government, the Independence Party was listening in Chicago to the address of William Randolph Hearst.

It was at least a singular coincidence that the birth of the National Independence Party and the final extinction of the Central Pacific debt should occur at the same moment, for the settlement of that debt was entirely due to the efforts of William Randolph Hearst, who prevented the Central Pacific from stealing nearly $60,000,000 from the people of the United States by the passage of a bill through Congress that not only wiped out the debt without any consideration, but actually made a present of many millions to Collis P. Huntington and his associates.

A brief review of the early career of the Central Pacific, its gigantic thefts from the people, its debauchery of the public service, its prostitution of the courts and legislatures, its destruction of important industries, may not be amiss at this time, when the opponents of the Independence Party are shaking their heads gravely and saying that private management of public affairs is at least free from the corruption that marks much of the Government service.

In 1861 a livery stable keeper, two hardware dealers and a dry goods merchant had called to their attention the plans of an engineer who presented the advisability of building a railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker were all business men of Sacramento. They had all come across the plains, and as business men were all familiar with the feasibility of the route, which was even then being traversed by daily stage coach lines and pony express messengers.

Finding that they could not raise anything like the money needed to build even twenty miles of the road, they appealed for assistance to the National Government, and in 1862 a bill was passed, known as the Pacific Railroad act, which provided that the Government would give bonds amounting to $54,000 per mile in the mountains, $36,000 per mile in the foothills, and $18,000 per mile on the level plains, toward the construction of the road.

In addition, the railroad was given every alternate section, ten miles in width, from Ogden to San Jose, and a right of way 400 feet in width over the same distance through Government land.

After the work had proceeded a little way, both the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific applied for an increase of the subsidy, and the Government waiving its right to the first mortgage, granted a second mortgage equal in amount to the first, increased the land grant from ten to twenty miles in width along the entire distance.

Having secured this enormous subsidy, worth in cash alone to the Central Pacific some $58,000,000, the promoters proceeded to swindle the Government by organizing a construction company named the Contract and Finance Company, which did the work and pocketed for itself the difference between the actual cost of the work and the money raised by the sale of the bonds.

How huge that theft was was never disclosed. At the Pacific Railroad investigation, some twenty years ago, the Government was informed that the Contract and Finance Company's books had been sent to England for safe keeping and had been burned, but some idea of the vastness of the steal may be gathered from the fact that when the treasurer of the Contract and Finance Company stole $2,000,000 he was locked up as a private prisoner in the railroad offices for more than a month, and then released without prosecution.

Not only did the promoters of the road from the very start pocket what was not honestly theirs, but they deliberately schemed to strap and bankrupt the property, so that it would finally fall into the Government's hands it was [illegible] practically of no value.

All of the terminals and ferries of the Central Pacific were made into private corporations, whose profits went into the hands of Huntington, Stanford, Hopkins and Crocker. Piece by piece the original route was abandoned for transcontinental traffic, and enormous charges made for running Central Pacific trains over the private lines of the promoters.

Not content with this, they built the Southern Pacific Railroad from San Francisco to New Orleans, a distance of over 2,400 miles, with the cash and the credit of the Central Pacific. They paid dividends on Central Pacific stock that were never earned, and, having made a market, they underwrote the bonds issued for the Southern Pacific with the name of the Central Pacific.

For a short time the Southern Pacific was ostensibly controlled by the Central Pacific, but, having secured from the State of Kentucky a charter which permitted the Southern Pacific to do business anywhere, they leased the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific at a price equal to its operating cost, and then proceeded to divert the traffic to the Southern Pacific, and succeeded to such an extent that under oath they testified in 1878 that over 84 per cent of the transcontinental freight was [illegible] by the Southern Pacific.

From the very first the management of the Central Pacific was marked by a disregard of public rights that was appalling. The Legislature of California was openly and notoriously corrupted until it was practically controlled by the railroad lobbyists. It elected Senators at the will of the railroad, and passed such laws as the railroad demanded. This same system of corruption extended to all the Boards of Supervisors and county officials; no competing road could get a franchise, and the railroad secured everything it asked for.

The railroad, by a system of rates and discriminations, controlled every wholesale house. One firm would be allowed to classify cutlery as bolts at 20 cents a hundred pounds, while another firm would be forced to pay $2 a hundred pounds.

Finding that the merchants resented this tyranny, and encouraged the formation of a line of clipper ships, the railroad proceeded to drive the ships out of business by the introduction of what was called the "truncked contract," under which a merchant was given a rebate, sometimes amounting to as much as 50 per cent of his freight bills, on his proving to the satisfaction of the company that for one year he had patronized their road exclusively.

The freight rate on every commodity was the difference between the value of the article at the point of production and its price at tidewater. The freight rate to interior States was the rate from New York to San Francisco plus the rate to the local point.

All the competing steamers through the interior rivers were driven out of business by the railroad company, and to kill off opposition they would carry passengers to Sacramento, a distance of 100 miles by boat, for 25 cents, and give them their meals free of charge. Then when the competition was killed off the rate would be raised to $2 again.

Interior cities which refused to grant subsidies and rights of way as demanded were boycotted. The then second largest city in the State, Stockton, was actually taken off the railroad map, and, although it was at the head of an enormous navigation, the route was removed a distance of eight miles, and when the citizens built a short line to connect with the Central Pacific the railroad people refused to allow its trucks to come within 400 feet of their own, and refused to connect with its cars in any way.

In 1881 came the crowning insult. The railroad company refused to pay its taxes, and was backed up in its refusal by a railroad judge, who decided that the fences along the line having been assessed as part of the roadbed, the assessment was invalid.

In 1879, with the passage of a new Constitution, the people of California began first to fight for the right to regulate freights, and a railroad commission was appointed. Senator Leland Stanford openly stated that the Commission was unlawful, and that either the Commission would own the railroad or the railroad would own the Commission. The railroad did own the Commission by bribery and corruption in both parties, and no objection was made to its existence until two honest men happened to be elected. Then the railroad took the matter into the Federal courts, and for fifteen years successfully resisted the right of the people to regulate freight rates.

In 1892 a Commission of the United States Congress was appointed to investigate the Central Pacific Railroad. When asked by the chairman of that Commission how much money he had personally paid out of the funds of the railroad to bribe legislators, Senator Stanford refused to answer, and a Federal Judge before whom he was taken ruled that he need not answer, and need not make SLINGS AND ARROWS By James J. Montague.

Kern.

Oh! Roaring Jim Kern started out to the West
And asked for an office at Taggart's behest.
And Democrats whispered, "Why, who can this be?"
While others replied to them, "You wait and see
The nation is yearning with one awful yearn
For just such a person as this fellow Kern."

Then men from Ohio, and others from Maine,
And millions of others arose to complain
That they knew that a kern was a sort of a bird,
But as for a Kern, why, they never had heard
Of any such creature, unless 'twas a sort
Of a way to say Colonel when saying it short.

"And now if you ask any good Democrat of Kern, he will answer, "Um—Kern—what is that?"

"But then," they said pensively, "it would concern
Us to know why in spelling it they don't write colin?
And still came the questions men wanted to learn,

Just how, who and why was this candidate Kern.
They'd all heard of Bryan, yes, since they were boys.
Save those who were deaf to all species of noise.
They'd all heard of Parker, although they would state
That no one had heard of the latter of late.
But Kern! Where he came from, or what he had done,
Or what were the places for which he had run,
Or what he had spoken, or what he had penned,
Or what he had broken, or what he could mend,
Or what he resembled, affected or wore,
Or if he was clerking, and where was the store,
Or just how he happened, or landed, or fell,
Of these things the answers no mortal could tell.

And they do not know yet, for inside of a week
Said Kern was so thoughtless as slyly to sneak
Back into the silence from whence he had came,
And nothing was left but his sad and short name.
And now if you ask any good Democrat
Of Kern, he will answer, "Um—Kern—what is that?"

"And so I slept outdoors at night amid encircling gloom, among mosquitoes that could bite a fellow through his tomb."

A Tragedy in a Few Lines

Little stick of dynamite,
Little hungry pup,
Had an active appetite,
Quickly ate it up.
Consequential citizen
Stumbled over our,
Kicked him in the slats and then——

A Brief Essay on Hygiene.

"You need fresh air," my doctor said.
Sleep out doors all night long,
And then, instead of getting dead,
You'll get both well and strong.
No matter though the winds may blow
And whistle through your hair,
It doesn't hurt the Esquimaux;
Get out and breathe fresh air.

And so I slept outdoors at night
Amid encircling gloom,
Among mosquitoes that could bite
A fellow through his tomb.
They say here in the hospital
That I am getting on,
Though I have left no lungs at all,
And half my throat is gone.

"You need the sun," my doctor cried.
Get out beneath the blue,
Don't wear a hat upon your head,
But let it shine on you.
And when you have a coat of tan
That's dark and deep and thick,
Why, then you'll be another man
And never more be sick.

The Real Runner.

A traveller, told that Niagara Falls
Was running a breakfast food mill,
Observed in astonishment, "Good gracious me,
Are those foolish Falls running still?
Too bad that the fleeting and transient cascade
This traveller's fancy should dazzle;
The record for running that Bryan has made
Has got the Falls beat to a frazzle.

"Little stick of dynamite, little hungry pup, had an active appetite, quickly ate it up."

How and Why a Railroad Paid Fifty-eight Millions

the plea of self-interest also. The Judge and the Senator dined together that night.

After Stanford had himself elected to the United States Senate, where he became the principal adviser of Grover Cleveland on California affairs, he quarreled with his associate, Collis P. Huntington. In revenge Mr. Huntington, in an interview which he marked O. K. over his own signature, declared that the books of the company showed that Stanford had taken $361,000 from its treasury to buy votes to make himself Senator, the price being $3,000 each for State Senators, and $1,500 each for Assemblymen.

Stanford made no reply to this, but his friends in the county went to his defense, and asserted that the $361,000 was not used to purchase his Senatorial seat, but was used to bribe the Legislature to pass a bill giving a public street to the railroad.

From October 10, 1869, when the Central Pacific was finished, until the time of the death of its last original founders, nearly every newspaper that criticised its management was bribed, bullied or ruined.

The Sacramento Union was purchased from its owners and run as a railroad paper. The San Francisco Post was subsidized. Small subsidies were given to the interior papers. The Western Associated Press, which was then a separate corporation extending from Chicago to San Francisco, was actually controlled by the railroad, and was used by it to further its schemes.

The collection of a damage suit against the railroad was an impossibility. If juries could not be corrupted, judges were. Men were put on the Appellate Courts by railroad influence openly.

The first severe blow ever struck against this combination was when the railroad undertook to defeat the present Chief Justice of the State, William Beatty, on the ground that he was not sufficiently subservient to their wishes. He was run on the Republican ticket, and William Randolph Hearst, who had just taken charge of the San Francisco Examiner, went to his support, and announced then and there that for all time he would oppose a railroad Democrat and support an anti-railroad Republican for the bench whenever the opportunity offered.

When the vast debt of the Central Pacific became due Collis P. Huntington publicly stated he could not and would not pay one cent of it; that no provision had been made for the payment of the debt, and that it would bankrupt the State of California if he was made to pay it.

Also he stated he would rather surrender the road to the Government than pay anything like the principal and interest.

Huntington went to Congress, and, through one of his representatives in the House and Senate, presented a bill providing for a loan of one hundred millions of dollars for the two Pacific roads, on which they should pay 2 per cent interest, and also providing for the repayment of this money in small amounts, beginning with $300,000 a year, and increasing by decennial additions to $7,000,000 a year. In other words, the Government was to loan the money at 2 per cent, pay 3½ per cent for it, and receive in the end less than the Government would have to pay in interest for the loan at 3½ per cent.

Mr. Huntington confidently asserted that his bill would pass, and it looked as if he was going to have his own way as usual, when William Randolph Hearst came into the fight and began the most remarkable contest ever waged in the United States in legislative halls.

On the one side was all of the vested interests represented by the United States Senate and by corrupt Congressmen standing for Huntington's bill, and on the other side were William Randolph Hearst and the New York Journal and Congressman James G. Maguire, who had been nominated and supported by Mr. Hearst's influence in California.

William Randolph Hearst sent telegrams and letters to every newspaper man in the United States, begging him to oppose Huntington's bill and support Congressman Maguire's bill, which called for the payment of the debt when it was due.

Hundreds of these editors rallied to Mr. Hearst's support, reproduced the articles published in the Journal and sent letters to their Congressmen and Senators notifying them that they were being watched.

The most sensational kind of testimony was given. When the matter came up for consideration before the Senate, Mr. Hearst went to Washington and personally conducted the fight against the Huntington bill. On this every corrupt newspaper in the United States let loose a flood of vituperation and abuse against William Randolph Hearst, intended to make their readers believe he was a bad and dangerous man.

Utterly undaunted by these attacks, he continued in Washington, getting help from other newspapers, furnishing information to the committee, getting up mass meetings, and with the New York Journal stirring up sentiment in the East until, on October 18, 1898, the poll of the House showed that Collis P. Huntington was beaten.

Huntington, finding that bluffs, bullying and corruption had failed, went to the Treasury Department and surrendered, and agreed to meet the full claim within a reasonable time.

Two days afterward James H. Budd, Governor of the State of California, sent East the following dispatch:

San Francisco, October 22.
William Randolph Hearst, Editor New York Journal.

On the occasion of the Journal's recent victory in defeating the Central Pacific funding bill before Congress I declared a public holiday in California. I hope that the fight the Journal is now making against the Union Pacific steal will be equally successful.

(Signed) JAMES H. BUDD,
Governor of California.

This remarkable battle took time and energy. All things worth fighting for are not achieved without great effort, but the right will prevail, and we are confident that the Independence Party, which was born on the day the Central Pacific paid the last of its debt, will secure the people other of their rights which are now being taken from them by corrupt corporations.

The Future of the Continents. By Garrett P. Serviss

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

Cuius does not refer to political history, nor to the development of races, although both are involved in it, but to those great revolutions of the earth's surface which, more than once in the past, have entirely changed its aspect by rearranging the relations of the lands and seas. Human life and recorded history are both so brief that they afford little cumulative evidence on this subject, but geology, dealing with vast epochs of time, is able to throw a great deal of light upon it. The time will come, although it is very remote, when history will be written upon a geological basis

The continents are not permanent, either in outline or in elevation. The old idea of the complete stability of the earth has passed away and we now know that the mightiest continents are subject to evolution, and to revolution, like everything else, and that the surface of the globe is continually in movement. The hills are not "eternal," nor the mountains, and immense areas of land are alternately covered with forests, fields, habitations and cities, and buried under the salt water of the sea.

It is, therefore, perfectly reasonable to speak, as Monsieur Lallemand, the French geodesist, has recently done, of the "Future of the Continents." It is a live question, vitally affecting human interests on many sides. Although the changes of level that occur all over the earth are usually too slow and too slight to become noticeable, except by scientific measurement, yet in many places they suffice, in relatively brief periods, to dry up navigable waters, to obstruct channels of commerce, to destroy bays and harbors, to place important centres of trade and population, once parting deep waters, far inland; and, on the other hand, to submerge inhabited lands and drive their occupants to new homes

In view of these facts far-seeing thinkers long ago suggested the importance of placing at as many points as possible, marks of reference, the exact level of which should be determined at stated intervals. A well-known example of the alternate rise and fall of the earth's surface is afforded by the history of the Temple of Serapis at Pozzuoli, near Naples. Here the perforations in the columns made by marine animals show that the fluctuations in the level of the Mediterranean Sea have amounted to many feet since Roman times. Along the east coast of the Adriatic Sea the land has risen so much that at least one great seaport, much frequented during the early centuries of the Roman Empire, is now far from the sea and surrounded by sandy plains and vineyards. Holland was formed by a sinking of the land, although deposits brought down by rivers have since partly filled the depression.

The first marks of reference to determine scientifically the changes of the earth's level were erected after the meeting of the European Geodesic Association in 1867. Eight were soon placed in Austro-Hungary, and now they are to be found more or less in all civilized countries. But more are needed, and more regular and exact observations are demanded. Monsieur Lallemand, who is in charge of the levelling operations undertaken by the French Government, calls for a general combination of all nations in this work. The marks of reference should be placed not only in districts where changes of level are conspicuous, as in volcanic regions, but also in places where such changes have not been suspected, for the whole globe is breathing, so to speak, like a living animal, owing to the play of forces within it, and the changes thus produced affect its entire surface. By a careful study of these changes it would eventually become possible perhaps to predict great disasters, like earthquakes, which are only a consequence of the continental strain to which the terrestrial crust is subjected. The famous earthquakes in the Valley of the Mississippi in 1812, when, for a time, a reach of the great river was so tipped that its waters flowed backward and vast depressions were found in the soil, are of this nature. Recent explorations in Central Asia have shown that enormous changes of level have taken place there, causing lands once well populated and cultivated to become uninhabitable.

With the scientific apparatus now available it is possible to determine changes of level in the face of a country amounting to only four inches. Yet more delicate measurements may become possible in the future. Every country, says Monsieur Lallemand, ought to renew its fundamental levelling at least two or three times in a century. When catastrophic changes occur, of course, immediate remeasurements are necessary, like those which have recently been completed in California. It is only thus that man can arrive at a knowledge of the geologic revolutions of the globe that he inhabits, and possess not only a history of the continents, but a provision of their future.

The Horrors of the Surgeons' Knives—By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

THE men of science look back to-day with wonder upon the time when "bleeding and leeching and purging" formed the universal treatment given to all kinds of invalids.

If a man was anemic from lack of proper nutrition, or simply from lack of a knowledge how to breathe and stand and walk, he was bled precisely the same, as was the gourmand whose maladies came from over-eating.

The fever patients and the victims of epidemics were bled as freely as the majority of the sick died it was called the dispensation of Providence.

We know to-day that this treatment was the result of dire and awful ignorance.

Yet in its time, it was respected as the highest order of medical science.

Just so to-day is respected the frightful butchery of men and women by surgeons, whose mania for "operations" is on a par with the old time mania for using the lancet on every ind spread individual. Not one operation in ten to-day is absolutely necessary.

Simple fa[illegible] external and internal baths, taken at the first indication of appendicitis, would cure hundreds of sufferers who have been operated upon. The blessed X and violet rays would cure eight out of every ten advanced cases of that malady, as well as nine per cent. of the maladies peculiar to women who become the victims of the surgeon's knife.

The time will come when the world will read with horror of these atrocities, and when the monstrous thing known as vivisection will be regarded as the performance of men grown in the darkness of ignorance.

However enlightened these men believe themselves to-day the future will class them with the unenlightened.

It has been said by experts that the terrible crimes committed by Mrs Gunness at the Port of Missing Men, in Indiana, were the result of her being [illegible]ly dead.

Those who read the acts done in the name of science by those surgeons who have gone mad over vivisection can but think these men are also emotionally dead.

There is great interest now among the thinking people of the world, the people with hearts and emotions, as well as with brains, in this subject of vivisection.

For a long time it was supposed by many that all anti-vivisection societies were composed of hysterical and ignorant individuals, who were opposed to the march of progress. But the revelations made by this society have been too appalling to ignore. And these revelations have aroused a wide spread interest in the work of the association.

A letter received recently by a friend was sent me for perusal, and to use as I saw fit.

Portions of this letter are here given:

"I am going to call to your attention something in which many of us are deeply interested. I refer to the matter of vivisection.

"There has been introduced into the New York Legislature a bill having for its object the regulating and restricting to within certain limits, at least, of the practise of vivisection.

"As the law stands now, there is practically no limit to which the medical profession may not go in experiments on living animals. There is no provision for the use of anæsthetics, and, so far as can be ascertained they are generally not used at all, or else insufficiently and with great carelessness. There is no provision for a merciful death at the end of the experiment.

"Often these helpless creatures are tortured and left in great agony for days and weeks, and in some cases even months before death releases them. There is no provision by law for inspection of the places where these things are done. As some one has truly said, the vivisector himself is the court of first and last resort, and I think it must be admitted he has frequently shown himself unworthy of the authority he holds. Apparently many of the experiments are wilful, without justification from the standpoint of science and the same experiment is repeated again and again, regardless of the suffering thus needlessly inflicted. Participation in such scenes of horror cannot fail, it would seem, to [illegible] brutalizing in its effect upon the [illegible] students themselves, and that, of course, is a menace to human beings as well as the dumb animals. In a French medical journal a former vivisector described his emotions under such conditions as resembling intoxication. It filled him with "a sort of ecstasy." In the Revue Nationale one of them gives this account of a certain experiment:

"He says that he fastened several large dogs on a table and beat them with heavy mallets, striking them thirty-two times on one side and then thirty times on the other, with as much force as he could exert, after which he dislocated both shoulders and fastened the limbs behind their backs. He adds that he did this without anæsthetics, that he might know how much pain was inflicted, from the creatures cries, and also, "because" he adds we know the generous nature of the dog who at night will lick the hand that in the morning was engaged in beating him with a mallet."

On page 204 of the Report of the Royal Commission, London, is recorded an experiment under cocaine (a most cruel poison which paralyzes motion while only heightening sensation). The dog was a small, docile animal, which, a few minutes after the drug was injected, staggered on its forepaws, walk[illegible] [illegible] and fell over [illegible] at the mouth and sweating abundantly. Its windpipe was then slit open and the nozzle of the bellows connected with a gas engine, used for artificial respiration was inserted. Stealing a Girl's Love

The Spinster-Lady Gives a Timely Scolding

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"Bob," said the Knocker-Lady, "I'm going to scold you."

"Please don't. It's too [illegible] done anything to [illegible] perfect angel child for ages."

"Don't be flippant, Bob, you know perfectly well what I'm going to scold about."

The young man gave a high, settled himself comfortably in the Morris chair and waited.

"Bob, how long have you been paying attention to Dolly W——?"

"Oh," drawled Bob, "quite a while, I guess."

"Are you in love with her?"

"Oh, I say [illegible] putting it rather strong."

"What's that? I'll do anything you say."

"Well, I think you had better go straight to her like a man, and tell her that while you value her friendship more than you know, you are not in a position to devote yourself to her as a lover."

"Do you mean that I should not pay any attention to any girl?"

"I mean that you should not monopolize entire time and interest of one girl."

"Dolly will feel desperately hurt."

"She will feel [illegible] for a while, but the hurt will come when she will wonder how in the world she ever [illegible] such a one as you."

VIEWS OF COUNTRY'S PRESS ON THE INDEPENDENCE PARTY

ITS IMPORTANCE IN THE COMING CAMPAIGN EVERYWHERE ACKNOWLEDGED

IT IS A FORCE THAT MUST BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.

So Declares the Philadelphia North American in a Strong Editorial.

Denver Post Recalls How Fremont Divided Nation's Votes in His Campaign.

PRINCIPLES COMMENDED

Indianapolis Star Declares That the Publicity Plank Is a Good One

FOLLOWING are extracts from the editorial and news columns of various representative paper throughout the country, commenting on the Independence party, its plat form and its future.

They are taken at random and show that the new party has made a profound impression on thinking men in all sections.

Bad for Gompers, Says N. Y. Tribune

From the N. Y Tribune, Aug 4

In the controversy over the authenticity of the reputed appeal made by Mr. Gompers to Mr Hearst and abruptly rejected with much vigor of epithet, Mr. Hearst is thus far considerably ahead. The plea to which he supposed he was responding in so decisive a manner was that the Independence party should support Mr Bryan instead of going it alone and thereby giving the election to Mr Taft. But Mr. Gompers, unless otherwise much troubled by the signs of rebellion against him in the ranks of the Federation of Labor, promptly denied that he had ever addressed such an entreaty to Mr Hearst. Here was an interesting mystery, for it was, of course, obvious that Mr Hearst believed that the cable dispatch which he received was genuine and replied in good faith; but we feel bound to conclude that the matter has been solved by the statement of Mr. Gompers's American associate at the Denver convention, with its accompanying admission that he acted in that paper yesterday.

From this evidence it now is conclusively established that Mr Gompers asked the question, and it is that his appeal to Mr Hearst and no party, through Mr. Hearst, in behalf of Mr. Bryan, was sent and was consequently informed that it would be. The only reasonable conjecture is that Mr. Gompers, in issuing his repudiation, relied on a quibble of words. It is true that he did not send the message himself, but merely took care that it should be sent. This is the least discreditable explanation of the incident which seems available after the clear denial in "The American." We doubt if it will have the effect of allaying the suspicion and antagonism which its recent political performances have aroused against Mr Gompers, who, in his Federation, is soon more likely to make his awkward and anxious efforts to shake off fright still more unsatisfactorily.

Bryan Reckoning Without His Host.

From the Louisville Herald

Hisgen is not the ordinary type of politician, but a plain, unpretentious business man who, as he says, and his brothers has risen to affluence. His long and persistent fight against the Standard Oil Company which ended his refusal to sell out, and which to crush his business in Springfield by unfair methods of competition, proves that he is man of no ordinary power and capacity. New York World.

There is reason to think that the Independence League is far better off than the party platform, and Mr. Bryan may pull before the close of the campaign that he is reckoning without his host when he says that the rank and file of the party [illegible]

Mr. Hisgen Not An Office Seeker

From the Baltimore American, Aug 1.

In a speech to his neighbors when they welcomed him home to West Springfield, Mass., on the Independence League ticket for President, said, I declare that office seekers are a lot of moral cowards. They have to look when they get up in the morning at a rib rooster to see which way the wind blows, for to which way they will vote." Mr. Hisgen, in running on the Independence League ticket, can truthfully say that he is not an office seeker.

Hisgen Loved For Enemies He Has Made

From Salem News

The warm feeling entertained for Candidate Hisgen of the Independence party may be accepted as evidence of the public hatred of Standard Oil methods. Mr. Hisgen, it will be remembered, came into notice as a determined opponent of the oil monopoly. He is loved inside as well as outside of the league, for the enemies he has made, especially those of the dangerous gang.

THE NEW THIRD PARTY NOT TO BE DISMISSED WITH SCOFFING

From the Philadelphia North American

THE birth of a new national political party is not a happening to be dismissed with a sneering. A convention such as that of the Independence party at Chicago cannot mean the election of the candidates of that party. It may well mean, indirectly, the election of some other candidate and the defeat of yet another—both of the most powerful parties.

America has seen the birth and death of many "third parties." Not one that ever became a real force was built about any one man. The idols in our history were considered in their own day merely as exponents of existing sentiment—not as the creators and essential parts of any new party.

But we cannot forget how the Free Soilers did build the Republican party upon the wreckage of the Whigs. And with the recent record of the Democrats in mind, and the memory of Fremont's hopeless candidacy and what came from it, we may dispute the probability, but cannot deny the possibility, of an outcome of the utmost importance from the present Chicago convention.

A party that polled 225,000 votes for Mayor of New York; a party that cast 75,000 ballots for Hisgen to be Governor of Massachusetts—5,000 more than the Democrats could poll, a party that is a power in Illinois and holds the balance in California, is a party to be reckoned with.

It typifies the truth that there is a struggle that will continue to the death in this country. Every thinking man in this nation knows that this country is approaching a crisis between the forces whose creed is equal opportunity and the supporters of special privilege. And at such a juncture the appeal to the citizens by parties wholly critical and not bound to provide practical and constructive designs cannot be disregarded by any earnest students of our civilization.

When all agree that certain things constitute a wrong and that certain wrongs exist, they do always in all human affairs—it is the easiest matter imaginable to formulate declarations of right. This the new party has done. And many clauses of its platform are theoretically perfect.

The wrongs and abuses do exist. And if this or any other radical party could convince the mass of the American people that no honest effort was being made by either of the dominant parties to correct these evils, we believe that public sentiment would be strong enough to make of the new party a mighty political factor.

BRYAN'S FRIENDS FEARFUL OF CANDIDACY OF THOS. L. HISGEN

From the Washington Post, July 31

Leading politicians of both the great parties are engaged just now in an effort to figure out whether Mr. Taft or Mr. Bryan will be the gainer or loser by the Independence Party movement, launched so enthusiastically at Chicago this week. Of course, any conclusions they may reach now must necessarily be tentative, for it will not be until the campaign is well under way, or even approaching its termination, that anything like fairly accurate data can be compiled.

Still it is to be observed that the friends of Mr. Bryan are exhibiting the greater concern over the candidacy of Thos. L. Hisgen, of Massachusetts, who was placed in nomination by the Independents on Tuesday, the Democratic nominee himself having declined to accept the honor. Democratic leaders are inclined to their own party.

The explanation of their disquietude appears simple. In the first place, the Independence platform contains certain planks calculated to appeal more strongly to the radical element of Democracy than corresponding planks in the Denver platform. Most conspicuous of these is the labor plank, in which the promise of more complete and injunction legislation is held forth, and it will be recalled the Democratic leaders purposely went further than did the Republicans at Chicago last month, in the hope of winning over a large percentage of Republican wage-earners on election day. This is looked upon as a master stroke on the part of the Independents, and it is not surprising that Mr. Bryan has deemed it worth while to begin early in his effort to prevent at alienation of conservative voters.

The founder of the new party, William R. Hearst, will manage Candidate Hisgen's campaign, and it must be admitted that he is a man of great resourcefulness. The politicians expect that his most effective work will be done in New York, where his newspapers have a tremendous circulation and influence. He also has newspapers in Boston in Chicago and in San Francisco and Los Angeles, Cal., all of them energetic.

Having been a Democratic before inaugurating the Independence Party movement, it is but natural to assume that Mr. Hearst's following will consist largely of Democrats, and in this fact is to be found a cause of anxiety on the part of Mr. Bryan's friends and Mr. Bryan himself.

From the calls Republicans will of course look to it, although the leaders of that party do not appear to be disposed to take the matter seriously. It is considered that their losses will equal or even approximate the defection from the Democracy. Some of the Republican managers believe that for every Republican vote lost in this way there will be three or four Democratic votes, and this explains their apparent complacency at the birth of the new national party.

Of course, the Democratic managers question the correctness of this ratio, and, as indicated, there can be no basis for accurate computation until some time in October, when the party managers usually undertake to make a preliminary poll with a view to testing the drift of political sentiment.

From the Hammond (Ind.) Times, July 28

TODAY marks the birth of a new political party. The Independence party in convention assembled will nominate candidates for the Presidency, Vice Presidency and electors in the various States. That any considerable number of men could be assembled together, nominate a ticket and enunciate party principles is not altogether due to the zeal, ability and means of William Randolph Hearst, although he has contributed to the result in no small degree. But great as his influence may be, animated by whatever motives, spurred by whatever desires and ambitions, Hearst with his money, his newspapers and his enthusiasm would cut but a sorry figure if back of it there was not a great unrest among a large element of the people.

Ignore it as they may, scoff, deny and ridicule it, there are in the ranks of both Republican and Democrats a goodly number of dissatisfied voters. There is dissatisfaction on the one hand with the bracadocio and the "Big Stick," the attacks upon judges, the hysterical utterances, the rampant riding of "the man on horseback," and dissatisfaction on the other hand with the whimsical attitude and policies of the Democratic standard bearer, thundering doctrines to-day, glibly repudiating them on the morrow, for this policy now, against it next week.

They denounce leaders one day, embrace them the next. And so from out these ranks, dissatisfied and disgusted, come the men that make up the Independence party. Many of the principles they proclaim are admirable.

The party consists, in the most part of earnest, zealous, thinking men who have left the old parties. They are men who place principle above policy or expediency. The support of Hearst and his great newspapers will give it a wonderful impetus. Those papers, circulating as they do among thousands and thousands of voters, ably edited, constantly pointing out the weaknesses of the old parties, will in fluence many a voter. There is a reason and an excuse for the Independence party, and it is destined to cut a most important figure in this campaign.

Publicity Plank An Admirable One.

From the Indianapolis Star, July 31

The Independence party platform has a plank dealing with corrupt election practises in which it urges that, though publicity of contributions is desirable and should be required, much of the matter of importance is the use to which contributions are put. "We believe," it says, "that the dishonest use of money in the past, whether contributed by individuals or by corporations, has been chiefly responsible for the situation which has undermined our system of popular government."

The point made in this plank is a good one. It is the knowledge of the way campaign money is spent that is far more important for the public than who gives that money. Through publicity in the latter respect is proper. It is not likely that the corrupt use of money in elections has ever approached the point that a position would be would have us believe but that it has been a big and powerful factor for evil no one will suppose. Of votes is beyond question.

Hisgen a Man of Fine Standing.

From the Louisville Herald, July 30

Thomas L. Hisgen, the choice of the Hearst party for presidential candidate, lives up well to the reputation he is a business man of unquestioned ability and strong and standing in Massachusetts. Were a man here to commit to something before he wins the approbation of his fellows. He will hold his own, and for our part, if we had to have either Hisgen or Bryan, we would prefer the former.

It is a fine thing if a political record, too. He ran in a four-cornered race for Governor of his own State, and came in second, leading out the regular Democratic nominee, much to the unconcealment of the Independence League leaders.

Hisgen is an independent oil man, and has been fighting the standard people with a will this night for years, and he is still fighting, which is more than most men can say who have gone up against the Rockefeller-Rogers combination.

The Hearst candidate will make things interesting with John Temple Graves, the former Georgia editor, for his team mate.

Hisgen Modest By All Means

From Boston Herald.

Mr. Hisgen doesn't blow his own trumpet loudly. In Boston this week he was introduced to ex-Governor Farnam of South Carolina, who seems not to have known that he was the Independence League candidate for President. Farnham openly regretted that Colonel Graves had not been put at the head of the ticket, and Mr. Hisgen good-naturedly assented.

Says Bryan Is Between Fires.

From the Boston Herald, August 1.

Mr. Bryan rightly divines that the Independence League ticket means more peril to him than to Mr Taft In the campaign he is between two fires which is a new experience. It hold him now posing as a "safe moderate" and aptly wooing the followers of Mr Hearst and Mr Hisgen, with such phrases as these: "Will a member of the Independence League assist in the defeat of the Democratic party which stands for so much he favors, merely because he cannot get all that he would like? . . . The question is not whether one can get all the reform he wants, but whether he can get the most reform." The tenor of the utterances of Mr Hearst, Mr Hisgen and other of the league's leaders does not point to their acceptance of this luring gospel of opportunism There were advocates of reform and fusing present at the Independence Leagues convention, but they met with a chilly reception Mr Bryan must adjust himself to a situation where he is under fire front and rear, and on the flanks.

Both Parties Will Add to Hisgen Vote

From the New York World

To the Editor of the World:

Mr. Gene Thomas's letter which you printed yesterday refers only to Democratic voters as regards Hisgen and your last year for Governor of Massachusetts. The Independence party town committees in my town last year and this are composed of nine members, and every one of them is a Republican. The vote Hisgen will get this Fall in Massachusetts will come from both of the old parties, as the voters are disgusted with them and they want a change.

FREDERICK A. BARTLETT

North Attleboro, Mass., Aug. 5.

Bryan Is Making Frantic Appeals.

From the Easton, Pa., Free Press, Aug. 1.

Mr. Bryan is engaged in making frantic appeals to the voters who sympathize with Mr. Hearst not to vote the Independence League ticket for fear it will hurt his candidacy, and he even goes so far as to charge the Republican party with aiding the new party movement in order to draw votes away from the Democratic ticket. What a vivid imagination the Nebraskan possesses!

May Affect the National Result.

From the Nashville Banner, July 31

The opening session of the National convention of the Independence Party in Chicago last night, with enthusiastic delegations and well thronged galleries in attendance with the meeting, is a political event which may have a greater significance in the presidential campaign this year than has been anticipated by many of the leaders of the old parties. This independence organization will create a political factor in the campaign that will be an important one. It will be a startling, effect to the determining of close contests, since the two great parties in some of the States are so evenly balanced that Mr. Hearst has accomplished a notable work in inspiring his followers with large numbers of people and in organizing a million big fighting forces. This Child Plays with Crocodiles

HOW PRETTY SEVEN YEAR OLD ANNA FISKE HAS MADE FRIENDS WITH 2000 YEAR OLD "MRS SULLIVAN"

"G[illegible] Joe and Mrs Sull[illegible] and [illegible] Joe," [illegible] Anna Louise Fiske, aged seven, as she stirs up her menagerie with a long stick every morning and coaxes them to eat cookies and peppermints.

Among [illegible] "nice" and "funny" playmates answer "wurghse-oof," or something like that, in alligator language, as their little guardian prods them in the neck and the old crocodiles open their mouths a foot wide and show their teeth in appreciation.

"That's the way they laugh," soberly pronounces little Anna Louise Fiske, and [illegible] one to make him glad. But the casual looker-on regards their expression as far removed from gleeful.

"I come and play with them every day, and they like me, I guess," quoth the pretty child, tossing back her straw locks to the wind and stirring up old Bob Fitzsimmons with a poke on the snout. "Bob" fights so much he has but one flipper and had his snout crushed until it points in so many ways as his six-foot writhing tail, but "Bob" doesn't care, because crocodiles cannot tell how much they are hurt. The worst one can do is to disturb them when they are sleeping in the sun. "Bob" cares at everything that disturbs him, but if he loses a pound of flesh now and then it is merely a mosquito bite so far as his sensations are concerned. If they would bite a hunk out of him without disturbing his dreams, then it would be all canceled.

Anna Louise Fiske showed the SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter around the [illegible] Alligator Farm, pointed out the largest crocodile, estimated to be 5,000 years of age; old Jumbo Joe, the boss alligator, twenty-two feet in length and a [illegible] other wonderful reptiles idealized in her little imagination, and especially "Mrs Sullivan," who is responsible for more crocodile eggs than Little Anna Louise Fiske, daughter of the band, child of Mr. Fiske the snare drum player of the Paragon Park Orchestra, ever knew existed.

"My, But That Will Be Funny"

"They are awfully funny. The eggs look just like potatoes, only they are all white and there, covered up in the sand, and Alligator Joe says they are going to hatch out soon—not chickens—just crocodiles. I never saw anything but chickens hatch out of eggs and I want to see how these will hatch a lot of crocodiles. Anyway I am going to see them, and if they are little [illegible] I may have one, Joe says I can take home and lead around with a string. My, but that will be funny.

"I'd just as leave lead 'Mrs. Sullivan' around, but they won't let me. Joe says she might take my foot for a hop-toad and bite it, but I'm sure she wouldn't want to hurt me, because I like 'Mrs Sullivan' and I am sure shall like her children when they hatch out. Ain't it funny for anything but chickens to hatch out?

"Yes, that is 'Mrs. Sullivan's' nest, that pile of sand. I wanted them to leave the eggs out in the sun where 'Mrs. Sullivan' and I could watch them, but Joe said he was afraid they'd get more, ate bitten, and he laughed at me when he said it.

"But I heard somebody say it wasn't warm enough or lights to hatch the eggs unless they were covered up. Here comes Joe now and I'll tell you about 'Mrs Sullivan's' nest.

"Lulu, kiddie," was the greeting of Alligator Joe, and his ponderous steps quickened as he caught sight of little Anna. He weighs over three hundred pounds and knows more about crocodiles and alligators than anybody in America, so it is said. Lifting the child fondly to the railing of the big pen Joe steadied Anna there with one hand, and while she dabbed with the lazy monsters [illegible] prong stick he spoke of his [illegible] raising a brood of young crocodiles in captivity.

Expects a Brood in a Week or So.

"This is the first batch of crocodile eggs I ever saw North," he began. "I have had them covered in sand in that mound over in the corner. They are in no danger, except that it may be too cold to hatch them out here.

"They usually take two months and six days for the eggs to hatch. By that reckoning we ought to have a brood of little [illegible] here in a week or so if there is warmth enough. The eggs are about the size of goose eggs, irregular in shape and irregular in size, just as you see in this picture I had made of them before we covered them in.

"The alligators and crocodiles were all fed recently. [illegible] of them gulped down [illegible] suffered. Next Sunday others will be hungry. It is wonderful how long they can go without eating.

"See that one over yonder with his head resting on Mamie Joe's tail? Well, he hasn't touched food for three months and he looks fat all the time.

"We have a little fun here at feeding time. When the crowd gathers we strike big fish on rocks and drop them [illegible] during the [illegible] and monsters. A hook [illegible] the fish and finds resistance. It is the [illegible] but the crocodile thinks it is the fish struggling and how they rattle around. Those big fellows will go over and over in the pen yanking and crunching until their teeth saw the rope off, when the big fish disappears with one [illegible]

"That is the only time they are lively except when my little side partner here, Anna Louise, and I stir them up. We don't like to have them get too lazy, do we, Anna?

"Do you really think there won't be chickens come out of the eggs, Joe?" asked Anna for the hundredth time, with a look of incredulity that gradually banished at Allig[illegible] suggestion.

"Well, I'm going to have the littlest one and my pony will put a chain around its neck and I will carry it around with my doll babies," pronounced the child with decision, "and I will give it a ride in my doll carriage."

"SPARKLE" MARVELOUS COLLIE PERFORMS FEATS WHICH PROVE HER REASONING POWERS

A lady of nobility and royal Collie ancestry is Sparkle

Her gloss, silken coat betrays
The strain of sunny Scottish days
The shepherd's friend, a lassie's delight,
As proud as any titled knight,
A dog, 'tis true, well trained to hand,
Yet walks no lady in the land
More graceful, kind or leal or fair,
Of quicker wit or blood more rare
Than Sparkle.

"CERTAINLY," says Sparkle, "dogs do think and I can prove it."

If you put her to the test she will perform so many marvelous tricks and display not mere dogish instinct, but such apparent reasoning power that you are convinced before you leave that at least one dog thinks and that dog is Sparkle.

Sparkle is the prettiest Collie imaginable, a high bred lady of aristocratic lineage, perfect manners and great intelligence. She is four-footed proof of the saying "Blood will tell." She shows birth and breeding in every line, from the tip of her sensitive nose to the end of her plume-like tail.

She is the star, the sparkling star, in a bright constellation of trained dogs in Darling's Pony, Dog and Monkey Circus at Wonderland. And she is the personal friend by thousands of Bostonians who have met her at the circus.

The word "met" is no jest. After the regular performances of the circus the audience is privileged to meet Sparkle, the premier member of the canine troupe.

When you are introduced to Sparkle she gives every indication of being glad to meet you. The silky ears are pricked up. The wolf-like eyes glow with dogish intelligence. There is a cordial wig-wagging of the plumed tail as further token of amity and to complete the friendly greeting, Sparkle daintily lifts one pretty paw and offers it to you to shake. The acquaintance once established on proper lines, Sparkle is your friend. And a friend worth having too.

She likes candy, or rather any human friend, and has had a special chum in Will Mead, who is connected with the Darling outfit. She has lived with Mead since she was a little less than puppy size. If such equalities as those may be applied to a lady. She is now four years old, in the prime of her young strength, intelligence and beauty.

Sparkle is of the famous Morgan Collie stock. Her pedigree is registered in the American Kennel Club of New York and there is no value on her. That is, you couldn't buy her for money because Mead wouldn't part with her. A clever trained dog is worth more than more money to an owner. Besides that, Sparkle has endeared herself so to Mead that he cannot imagine himself parting with her. It would break the hearts of the man and the dog to separate them.

ADDING A COLUMN OF FIGURES

A Dog of Fine Lines.

Her technical description accords with the regulation requirements of Collies of the highest class. Her head is moderately long covered with soft, short hair. Her skull is flat with very little "stop," as dog men express it. The almond-shaped eyes are large, placed wide apart and of dark brown color. The small ears, like the head, are covered with short, dark hair.

The Collie neck is long, arched and muscular. The chest is deep and narrow in front, but wide behind the shoulders, and the back is short and level, with the loins arched and powerful.

The legs, as they should be, are straight, muscular and rather flat of bone. The hind quarters are slightly drooping and very long from hips to hocks. The pasterns are long and springy, with the soles of the feet well padded and the toes arched and compact.

The tail is carried low when the dog is quiet. When Sparkle is excited it is carried [illegible] straight out behind.

The outer coat is softer than the inner coat, which is soft, furry and very dense. The "frill," the mane of hair on the breast, is abundant. The hair on the tail is profuse and it grows long and bushy on the hips.

These are the physical qualities which Sparkle inherits from a [illegible] ancestors, dogs who were trained to guide and guard sheep, to make for her long journeys over the Scotch moors and to live sound and healthy in the worst of Scotch weather, which can be very poor weather, indeed. The powerful, deep chest, the muscular legs and the sturdy pasterns furnish the wonderful running powers. And the clean-cut lines of the head, the big gleaming eyes and the long, narrow jaw spell a keen, prehensible intelligence, almost human in its range.

The chief charm about Sparkle, to the casual observer, is her expression. Sparkle actually smiles at you. If she likes you. When she is amused she laughs. And she must have a deep doggish sense of humor, for she smiles and laughs often.

She is a good "worker" as they say on the stage, going through her act as though she was tickled to death with the act and herself and the audience and everything in general.

Mead will bring her out and say: "Hello, Sparkle."

Sparkle nods politely.

"Feeling pretty well to-day, Sparkle?" asks Mead.

"Yes" nods Sparkle again.

"Say, Sparkle, see," Mead, "how would you like to be a monkey?

Sparkle glances disdainfully at the prancing and chattering "monks" on the platform and shakes her head in emphatic negation, as much as to say: "What a question to ask a lady, anyhow."

"How many days in the week, Sparkle?"

Quick comes the answer in seven sharp, incisive barks.

"And how many working days?"

"Wow wow wow wow wow wow."

"Isn't that as plain as a person could tell it?

"Well, Sparkle," resumes Mead, "How many days would you like to work?"

Nary a bark. And that tickles the audience immensely. Sparkle grins, too.

"By the way, Sparkle, have you had your breakfast to-day?" asks Mead saxlously.

Sparkle nods a comforting assurance.

"That's good," says Mead, "and what did you have for breakfast?"

"A roll," answers Sparkle.

"Look here, now," says the reader, "how on earth does that dog say she had a roll for breakfast?"

Why, she rolls over, to be sure. That's an easy answer for Sparkle to give.

Mead asks Sparkle if she feels like playing a little music for the audience. Like any obliging girl that she is Sparkle nods assent. Mead brings out a string instrument with one note missing. This note is a bell which Sparkle operates with a little foot lever. Mead pulls the bell strings for the tune of "Home, Sweet Home," and every time that the missing note is in the score Sparkle promptly steps on her little foot trap and sounds the note not too soon, not too late.

Tells the Time of Day.

Sparkle is educated, too. She can spell long words with her letter blocks. She can tell any time of day you call for by aid of her own big clock with movable hands. If you call for 9 15 Sparkle pushes the hour hand to the 9 with her delicate nose and then moves the minute hand to the fifteen minute place. And she never makes a mistake or gets confused.

That is a canine trick which puzzles the audience immensely. Yet Sparkle does it readily, no matter what time of day you call for.

"Sparkle," says Mead, "tell me how the ladies walk on a muddy sidewalk, such as they have in Boston."

Sparkle reaches around and grips her flank in her sharp teeth. Then walks across the stage with mincing steps, in absurd imitation of a woman holding up her skirts with one hand and picking her way fussily along the pavement.

Such are a few tricks in Sparkle's long repertoire. The common trained dog stunts, like "play dead," "roll over," "beg," "lie down," "sit up" and so on are also too ordinary for her to bother with. She likes something that takes some headwork.

For Sparkle is a thinker.

"NOW SET THE CLOCK"

TO BANISH NOISE FROM THE CAPITAL

Washington, Aug. 15.—An endeavor is to be made by the police department to make Washington a "noiseless city."

While the health officer is busily engaged in making this city a "spotless town" the superintendent of the police department announces that he is to war on loud noises.

Many noises that are really annoying the police cannot control, but there are other noises that can be suppressed, and Major Sylvester is priming himself and his subordinates to bring about this reform.

Commissioner West who has supervision of the police department when he learned of Major Sylvester's proposed ban on noises, said he heartily approved of it, and that much public good could be accomplished by such a crusade.

"General Bingham, head of the New York police," Mr. West said, "is engaged in whooping things up in that city. When he goes about anything he goes about it in the right way and with a vim and earnestness that generally results successfully."

Commissioner McClelland, when asked about the proposed move on the part of the superintendent of police, said:

"It is a good idea and for that reason it is embodied in the police regulations and is and should be enforced at all times. The idea is by no means new or original.

"For the past eight years I have been in hearty accord with all attempts to eliminate unnecessary noises. Unfortunately, there are some noises that are inseparable from civilization, and will never be eliminated. But I am glad to learn that the police department is going to show some activity in this respect."

The superintendent of police is particularly anxious to do away with noises made by street cars, especially during the midnight hours. In this respect he believes that much noise is caused by defective mechanism on the cars run in this city, which defects could and should be remedied.

What he believes could be easily abated in connection with the noises made by street cars are the loose running gears, street wheels and dislocated joints. He contends that if the local traction companies would put on better rolling stock a much more satisfactory condition would prevail.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS MANY TOWNS NEAR BOSTON.

Rumble Felt in Norfolk County; Men Violently Thrown to the Ground.

"EXPLOSION," SAID MANY

Official Report at Blue Hills Observatory Gives Time at 8:31 P. M.

THOUSANDS of persons in Norfolk County were startled last night by an earthquake which rattled crockery, overthrew furniture and frightened women and children. The earth quivered, there was a prolonged roar, an of thunder, windows were shattered, and in some instances men and women were thrown to the ground.

The zone of the disturbance extended from Hough's Neck, on the shore at Quincy, west ward to Dedham. The quake was felt in Milton, East Milton, Quincy, Norwood, Canton, Sharon and Hyde Park. The remotest point is not more than a half-hour out of Boston. The earthquake was not felt in Boston.

The quake was recorded on the seismograph at Blue Hills observatory at precisely at 8:31 o'clock.

Everywhere everywhere by an outlook rear the earthquake caused great alarm. It was nothing before the great San Francisco horror as directly south of Boston was learned that there had been no loss of life in towns where the earthquake trembled the noise of the quake sounded like an explosion, about a mile away. Night watchmen who heard the noise pronounced it a dynamite explosion.

The most observatory, high up on the loftiest pinnacle of the Blue Hills, from which Henry Hobo Clayton, the aeronaut, made fame as a daring balloonist, first felt the shock and saw the quake recorded. The earth shook smoothly.

Thought It Explosion.

In every case the first general impression was that an explosion had taken place in the vicinity. Everywhere there was the same story of a "loud rumbling noise." Some neighborhoods wouldn't accept the earthquake as an earthquake until they had heard from Director Clayton at Blue Hills.

Boston first heard of the quake from J. Roy Hutchin of No. 822 Water street, Hyde Park.

"I present the two-flat house at the corner of Water street and Hana avenue with William C. Clarke and family," said Mr. Hutchin. "Clark and I were out in the lawn eating at half past eight when we felt the earth tremble under us and were thrown to the ground. There was a loud rumbling noise. At first we thought it must have been the result of a blast on subject. It was some time before we even neared the earthquake theory. Mrs. Clarke came to the door to ask if we had heard a noise as of somebody falling down stairs. Then we began to compare notes with the neighbors and found that Hyde Park had been visited by a real earthquake.

No damage was reported by Hyde Park.

Not far away, at Quincy on the South Shore, Patrick Broderick, night watchman at the Fore River Ship Works, thought there had been an explosion. Broderick rushed to a telephone and called the Quincy police station. "Sergeant," he said, "there was been a big explosion, for I heard it. The shock shook the buildings here."

Lodgers at Hough's Neck heard the shock, and so did those at Braintree.

At Nathan Ames, a hardware man in Grant street, Quincy, the shock was as distinct as to Watchman Broderick.

Feared End of World.

"It sounded like the world was coming to an end," said Ames. "Things on the shelves in the store suddenly began to rattle. The building kind of heaved forward. I knew it couldn't be a thunder storm and I made up my mind it was a miniature earthquake."

Out at President's Hill, in Quincy, scores of residents had experience to relate. Jacob Crane, night watchman in the stables of the Old Colony Street Railway, thought a thunderbolt had landed. The shock shook the stables, Crane said.

Residents of Dedham were in the midst of the disturbance. Charles J. Hunter, a

Here's Your Latest! Vanderbilt's Valet Has Valet Himself

Valet Is First Valet and Valet's Valet is the Second Valet.

Newport, R. I., Aug. 15.—The very latest wrinkle in Newport's smart set is Alfred Vanderbilt's valet's valet.

A valet is common enough. Even wealthy contractors and successful prizefighters and comedians have valets. But a valet to a valet is different. It, or he, is an Eagle's idea. King Edward has a valet who has a valet. So do some members of the nobility. Likewise the multimillionaire of America.

When the valet has a valet the valet is the first valet and the valet's valet is the second valet.

Mr. Vanderbilt's first valet is Harry Kempster. He is not called 'Arry, if you please, but is always Mr. Kempster. The name of the second valet is not known. Maybe he is simply addressed as "You there," and let it go at that.

Mr. Kempster shaves Mr. Vanderbilt and lays out his clothes. But the clothes are pressed and other less dignified work is done by the second valet. Mr. Kempster does not press old clothes. Orrors! So.

ONE DEAD, TWO WOUNDED IN CITY TRAIN HOLDUP.

Atlantic Avenue Scene of Fatal Battle Between Gang and Trainmen.

POLICE BEGIN ROUNDUP

Desperadoes Flee Down Harbor in Boat, Pursued by Officers.

One trainman was stabbed to death, an other man will probably die, and a third was desperately wounded when a band of a dozen men held up a Union Freight Railway train a front of coal sheds at Wharf at 12:30 this morning.

Police reserves came quickly and on the scene a running battle ensued. The fleeing men were fired upon by the police and the crew of the train, and appropriated a power boat at the foot of Commercial Wharf and fled up the harbor.

The police boat Wat was called for and was soon in pursuit of the fleeing bandits.

Two Near Death.

The victims are:

Neeham Peter thirty years of age, No. 4 West Second street, South Boston—struck man for the U. S. Freight Railway, stabbed through the lung and heart, died instantly.

Morse, Thomas, forty-six years of age, of fourteen street, Everett, shot punctured wounds in body; condition serious; at Relief Hospital, Engineer, Union Freight Railway.

The police of Station 1 arrested and are holding Joseph Zano, thirty-five years of age of North street, on suspicion of being concerned in the affair. He is held in the station, denies all knowledge.

At 1:30 this morning a freight train of the Union Freight Railway was moving along Atlantic avenue.

Wouldn't Get Off Track.

Switchman Neeham was walking in front astern in hand clearing the way. Opposite Commercial Wharf were a half dozen bandits. They were standing on the railroad track.

Neeham ordered the men to one side. They declined with the command to move. Words followed. Then blows were struck and in an instant the bandits had on the switchman and beat him to the ground. Knives were flashed, then buried in the prostrate form of the railroad man.

He was instantly killed.

Morse and Turley saw the battle. They stopped the train and ran to the relief of Neeham. The desperadoes closed in upon the two.

Again the knives flashed. Again they descended and Morse and Turley fell dangerously wounded.

Then the clang of an approaching police wagon was heard. The desperadoes started to run. Zano ran right into their arms of two policemen. He was overpowered. The others fled to Commercial Wharf and rushed into a waiting power boat. In an instant more the boat had backed out from the wharf, turned its nose down the harbor and vanished in the gloom.

The police boat Wat Union, full steam up, started down the harbor in pursuit of the flying power boat.

Special Officer Dennis Driscoll and Policeman Saltus had a brush of station 1 arrested three negroes before one o'clock this morning on the charge of fighting out from the wharf in a power boat. The men were hurried to the station 1, where they refused to give their names. They were put through a grilling by the officers of the station, but were stubborn, refusing to tell anything about themselves.

WASHINGTON STREET THEATRE IN FLAMES

Fire, which started in the rear of the Old South Theatre, No. 14 Province Court at 3:30 o'clock this morning, did more than $2,000 damage and threatened for a time to spread to adjoining buildings before the firemen, who did quick work, got it under control. The cause is not known.

The first floor of the three-story rear of the theatre is occupied by the old Bo ton Theatre on the first floor, by the cigarette shop of Constantine Sarafian, second floor by the paint and decorating shop of E. S. Phillips on the third.

300 IN FIRE PANIC IN REVERE HOTEL

Smoke pouring out of a third floor window at the Metropolitan Hotel started a panic in that structure at about 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and caused a big crowd to gather in front of the house on Revere Beach boulevard.

There were from 250 to 300 guests in the hotel, and when the cry of "Fire" rang through the corridors a wild and scramble to escape started. The alarm was soon over, however, as the hotel employes speedily extinguished the blaze. A panic was accidentally set fire to the building, and gone out without discovering it.

Citizens by Hundreds, in Autos, Aid Police in Chase After Convicts.

Portsmouth, N. H., Aug. 15.—Six desperate prisoners escaped from the Rockingham County jail here this evening, overpowered Deputy Sheriff Hodgdon, locked him in a cell and, locking the prison door, fled in the darkness.

Four of them have already been captured and police officers are scouring the country for the remaining two. Special trains were run from Portsmouth to Dover when the news of the escape became known, and the police of both cities were called out. All the fugitives are known to the police as desperate characters, and have been in trouble with crimes of a serious nature.

Citizens in automobiles are patrolling every road leading from the jail, and the police of the jailbreak. Several suspicious characters were made to account for themselves, and every one seen anywhere near the jail was closely questioned. Along the streets where the jailbreak was first discovered, and for some distance after the men had escaped, there was a large crowd of persons out in automobiles and on foot, and those who have been in the city since it was reported that the fugitives had escaped say they have fled into New Hampshire.

Four Speedily Captured.

Two of the prisoners were recaptured in a general jail near to Somersworth, because they knew where it was that they could find refuge. A third was found asleep in a barn near the cottage Hospital. The fourth is in a pig pen.

The officers are still at large and one is known to have crossed a bridge towards Newcastle, but there are several leaders men on his trail and it is expected that he will be captured this morning. His direction was learned when he was temporarily delayed by a broken bridge. Today was a busy one for the patrols of the Piscataqua in the search of escaped convicts.

At about 6 o'clock this evening Turnkey A. Howard Hodgdon, while making his usual rounds of the prison, was attacked by the six prisoners, who were confined in the second tier of cells. Hodgdon was the only officer on duty at the time, and the prisoners, taking advantage of the fact, made a concerted attack upon him. Before he could give the alarm he was overpowered and locked in a cell. The prisoners then secured the keys to the outer doors and escaped.

Demanded Key of Jailer.

"Be a good fellow and give us that key," said one of the prisoners to Hodgdon. "I'll see you all hung if you don't," retorted the plucky jailer. He tried to shut the door, but the six men in a body rushed against it, and Hodgdon was thrown to the floor. He was then overpowered, and the keys taken from him. The prisoners then locked Hodgdon in a cell, and, locking the outer doors of the prison, fled. The alarm was given by Deputy Sheriff Hodgdon, who attracted the attention of persons passing the jail by shouting from the window of his cell.

Promises Men Warm Meeting.

Luco conferred with Costa at once and they notified the police. Both men declared that they would not comply with the demands and would take the consequences.

When seen by a Boston American reporter, Luco said:

"I am not afraid of any one of them in the city, but at night I go in constant fear. It looks to me like the act of a regular gang of blackmailers, and it is [illegible] they probably mean business.

"I have saved a little money, it isn't for such people as they are and I will be terrified not to give it up. [illegible] I carry a revolver and if the author of that letter is a resident of this city he will receive a warm reception.

After scrutinizing the letter, prominent Italians believe that three or four persons are implicated in the plot and that the writer is in three or four different hands.

The excellent penmanship and diction lead them to believe that it is the work of an educated hand.

Admiration of the maid's beauty appealed to Roberts's imported artistic instincts. His great wealth, drawn from the income from the former Boston publishing house of Roberts Brothers, enabled him to gratify his every whim. PITTSBURG, Pa., Aug. 15.—Pittsburg made it two in a row from the Doves by winning to-day's game by the score of 3 to 2. The contest was marked by several great fielding plays and by considerable grumbling at the Umpire. Dahlen was fined from the game in the fifth inning by Umpire Emslie for kicking and when Manager Kelley broke into the argument he was banished from the grounds.

Ferguson, who had not lost a game since July 1st, started in to pitch for the Doves, but was wild and ineffective, and was derricked by Kelley in the fourth inning. Lindaman replacing him and proving much more effective.

Maddox was on the firing line for the Pirates, and was in excellent form, the Doves being unable to bunch hits off him except in the first inning.

Doves Start Off Well.

The Doves began as they did yesterday, by scoring in the first inning. Browne drove out a single and a two-base hit by Bates followed rapidly. Gibson thought he saw a chance to catch Browns napping at third, and hurled the ball to Leach. The throw was very low, and the ball went far out to left field, Browne and Bates both scoring.

The Pirates got their first run in the third inning. After Maddox went out, Thomas walked, but was forced by Leach, who promptly stole second and scored on a single by Clarke.

Pirates Take the Lead.

The Buccaneers took the lead in the third when they secured two more runs. Storke and Abby were given bases on balls in succession. Wilson fanned, but Gibson bunnoered out a two-bagger which scored Storke. Maddox sent a long fly to Browne, on which Abby easily tallied. Browne's wild throw to the plate permitted Gibson to go to third. Thomas walked for the third time, and at this stage Kelley decided Ferguson had enough and substituted Lindaman. Leach ended the inning by going out on a fly.

Bostons Fill the Bases.

Boston had the bases full in the fifth, but could not score. Dahlen walked, Sweeney sacrificed and Graham walked. Lindaman fanned, and a single by Browne filled the bases, but Bates flied to Leach and ended the inning. Pittsburg also came near scoring in the fifth. After two were out, Storke singled and went to second on Abby's safety. Then they tried the double steal. Abby succeeded in pilfering second, but Storke was nabbed at the plate. Score:

JUDGES PENALIZE GALLUP AT FRANKLIN FIELD RACES

In Driving Axtelloid He Fouls Captain Hall and Officials Award Latter the Heat.

By ED. COGSWELL.

Captain Hall and Axtelloid were the two horses that furnished the excitement at the opening harness meet of the Boston Driving Club at Franklin Field Speedway yesterday, as in the initial heat they were so close at the wire that the judges called it a dead heat, while in the finish of the third heat, though Axtelloid was first by a length, yet A. S. Gushee driver of Captain Hall claimed a foul and after hearing the part of H. P. Gallup, who was driver of the winner. He said that the latter made a break on the turn and that Mr. Gallup pulled to avoid a collision. After considering the matter the officials allowed the claim of Mr. Gushee and awarded Captain Hall the heat.

The feeling between the two men of Captain Hall and Axtelloid started Monday evening at the club meeting, when the announcement of the race committee was made that they had been selected to manage the meet for the coming year.

Mr. Gallup, it seems, [illegible] somewhere that he couldn't [illegible] but made an error in part. [illegible] against Mr. Gushee's part [illegible] he could if would be easy [illegible] off the reel.

Mr. Gushee, thereupon responded with the remark that he was in favor his rival would do his utmost, for when the race was concluded it would find the name of Captain Hall at the top of the summary.

Thought Foul intentional.

After the judges had given the heat to Captain Hall through the fouling of Axtelloid, Mr. Gallup asked Mr. Gushee if he had any idea that he had fouled him intentionally, and the reply was that he certainly did.

"Well then," said Mr. Gallup, "I'm surprised to have you even say that such a thought had ever entered your mind, as I'd as soon think of pulling a gun and shooting you as to deliberately run into you in a horse race. My horse made a break and in catching him to his stall I scared [illegible] over into your sulky but I [illegible] unexcused it was clearly [illegible] race and the incident was closed.

Captain Hall won three [illegible] and race and the incident was closed.

Billy Wilson and Jeffords went a hard five heat battle before the former gained the verdict. Baron Thistle matched off three fast heats to take the measure of Jupiter. After Jo Ten [illegible] F. W. L. got his stride and carried off the honors in the three heats that he started. Under Wilkes H. S. Fitch made his debut on the speedway with his trotter Christiana and pulled second to Miss Wilkes in a three-cornered contest.

F. W. Hookey being absent, John Trout filled the harness with his horse, Oak Hurd. The former secured two [illegible] Hookey's [illegible] the latter has had [illegible] fourteen races this season but Mr. Trout [illegible] with a record [illegible] Red Rock [illegible] after winning the initial heat the gelding went lame from a cut quarter. A feature [illegible] the Laurels. Walter Bates tried to equal [illegible] two seconds with Emma E., but the best she was capable was pacing in just [illegible] as a pacer.

The club members are already [illegible] ing for next Saturday's card, which [illegible] Colonel Jerbidge will at South Weymouth [illegible] ing between the two cities over Franklin Field. The Dorchesters [illegible] matters at their own way, but the Old Colonists mean [illegible] show a few tricks in trotting horses when they meet their rivals on their own stamping ground at half mile tracks. FAST HORSES FOR READVILLE MEET Entry List in Class Races, but Quality of Horses Is Excellent.

As was expected the entry to the open classes for the Readville Grand Circuit meeting, which begins on August 24, is quite light, and while there will be some quality to the racing, the number of horses will be small. In the 2.08 pace, for instance, there are only seven entries, and in the 2.12 trot there are but six. The 2.20 trot has a good field in the nine entered. When it is recalled that Margaret Dillon, Miss Adbell and the others come together, while the latter will favor Margaret Dillon, yet she will not know that she has been to the races should she win the battle.

And this is the way all through the list. It must be remembered that these are fine class races, the stake stands, including the $10,000, the Massachusetts 2.08 trot, having come in at the beginning and the three guaranteed purses aggregating $17,000 of horses entered in the class races.

BOY OF 12 IS NOW CHAMPION RUNAWAY

Cambridge Lad's Love to Travel Worries Parents and Keeps the Police Busy.

SKIPS TWICE TO NEW YORK

Arrested Four Times in One Night and Otherwise Heads the List.

Rexford Trott, aged twelve, a son of George G. Trott, of F ellis street, West Cambridge, appears to be the undisputed owner of the title "champion runaway Boy of Cambridge." Rexford is very small for his age, but in the past two years has given his parents considerable anxiety and worry, and the police of Greater Boston, Springfield, New York and other places have quite a lot of work.

Rexford's latest stunt occurred a week ago Thursday night. When supper time came Rexford was missing. His parents waited and waited but the youngster did not show up. Late Thursday evening the Cambridge police received a message from Boston, saying that Rexford was aboard the New York and Boston liner Yale, bound for New York and had upon his arrival there would be shipped back Saturday morning.

This was the second time that the youngster had stowed himself away in the Yale and had gone to New York on a previous trip Rexford managed to land, with a nickel in his pocket, and while taking in the sights of the city was seen by a New York reporter who took Rexford to the station where the youngster could not satisfactorily account for his presence in a great city with so much money.

Seen the Big City.

True to schedule, Rexford arrived in New York a week ago Saturday. Arrangements were made to send him back by train, an officer being detailed to accompany him. When the train stopped at Springfield, the sightseeing boy left Rexford once more and he slipped away from the officer. After roaming about the Springfield streets he was the same old story, picked up by the police, and a telephone message to Cambridge that they had him prisoner notify parents.

On several other occasions Rexford has gone off on his journeys and has come back, and as usual the police have sent him back. The youngster enjoys the unusual reputation of having been arrested four times in one night. Some time ago, a boy who lives near Rexford invited him to take a little trip to Revere Beach. After seeing the sights the youngster started for home, getting only as far as Lechmere, about 11:30 o'clock in the evening. Rexford got off the car at Inman Square, lost his way, and wandered about the street until 7 o'clock.

Again He Is Run In.

A patrolman from station 2 picked him up and sent him into the station for safekeeping. Life in a police station did not interest Rexford, and at 8:30 he asked the lieutenant if he might go home. The police official answered and Rexford started out. Once more he got lost, was picked up by an officer and once again the dragon made a trip and Rexford was sent back to the station for safekeeping.

The lieutenant explained matters when Rexford was brought in, and he was again allowed to go. He had walked about a few miles when another Cambridge bluecoat, suspicious of seeing such a small boy at so early an hour in the morning, picked him up and sent him in for the fourth time. The lieutenant nearly collapsed when Rexford arrived for the third time, and before more Rexford was told to "beat it."

This time the youngster took a different route. He had gone but a short distance from the station when he spied a passenger man, seeing the youngster at so early an hour, grabbed him and took him in.

The lieutenant was busy at a desk when in marched the Rexford with Rex ford. This time it was a case of "Holy smoke," shouted the lieutenant "where in tune have you been tonight, Rexford meekly answered, "the police, sir."

"The Police Won't Let Him."

It wasn't a case of "being afraid to go home in the dark," but rather a case of the couldn't go home in the night, the police wouldn't let him."

Rexford Trott was yesterday committed to the Lyman School by Judge Stone in the Cambridge Police Court.

MAKE ELABORATE CARNIVAL PLANS

Revere Merchants Now Seek to Eclipse All Previous Attempts at the Beach.

Despite rumors that there would not be any carnival at Revere Beach this Summer, the committee of merchants is making extensive preparations for the event, and predict that it will surpass all previous undertakings.

The committee has secured the consent of the Metropolitan Park Commissioners to erect arches over the Boulevard, and the electrical display will be the most elaborate ever seen at the beach, if the plans of the committee are carried out.

Summer residents have joined with the merchants to make the affair a success and quite of the resorts will be decorated with Japanese lanterns and bunting in accord with the wishes of the carnival committee.

Miss Josephine L. Munsil of Brookline now sunnering at the beach, is canvassing the cottagers and Summer residents, soliciting their co-operation to make the event a record-breaker, and so far she has received assurances from scores.

The committee has arranged to have open air attractions day and evening.

REVERE "VETS" IN LOWELL PLAY-OUT

The Revere Veteran Firemen are preparing to attend the muster at Lowell, Thursday, and about 200 members have signified their intention of being present and will endeavor to carry the first prize for the best marching team.

Charles Perry, president of the association, will be in charge of the party and is confident that the Revere team will win.

Should the association, which will be in charge of the pastor of the parish, Rev. Dr. John A. Crowe. At the barn party there will be many unique features, according to the committee planning the affair, including a rube parade with prizes for the most costumed participants.

PLAN RUBE PARADE AT BARN PARTY

Arrangements are being made for a monster barn party and county fair in Cypress Hall, Cambridgeport, on the evening of Sept. 24. The proceeds will go toward the coming bazaar of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, which will be in charge of the pastor of the parish, Rev. Dr. John A. Crowe. At the barn party there will be many unique features, according to the committee planning the affair, including a rube parade with prizes for the most costumed participants.

MAYOR AND POLICE CHIEF IN MIX-UP

Officer Ejected From City Hall During the Drawing of Jurors.

Biddeford, Me., Aug. 15—The ejection of Chief of Police Charles B. Harmon from the court room in City Hall, where grand and traverse jurors were being drawn by order of Mayor Cornelius Horigan, because he would not sit down and the subsequent fining of charges against him of conduct unbecoming an officer, created the greatest sensation of the year in political circles and is being discussed in every club, factory and business house today.

The row between the Chief of police and the Mayor bids fair to overlap indefinitely and will eventually have to be settled by the courts.

Chief Harmon said today that he would present the facts in connection with the drawing before Judge Hale of the United States District Court in Portland and learn if he has not the privilege to stand while the jurors are being drawn.

He will also turn all the facts to the United States judge of his presence from the room where the drawing was going on by the Mayor's orders.

Says He Was Within His Rights.

He said further: "I have the right to and where I can see that the drawing is conducted legally. As long as I do not interfere in any way with the drawing I have a right to stand anywhere in the room.

"I do not consider that the Mayor had any right to remove me from the room. I will not say what charge I intend to refer against the Mayor, but I have some very definite reasons to back up the charge I will prefer.

Harmon went to Portland this afternoon to consult with the Judge of the United States County. The commissioners are not taken any action on the charges preferred against the chief, and it is not expected that they will do so.

H. O. Hutchins, a chairman of the State Police Board set forth that he was receiving any charges against Chief Harmon. He received a telegram signed by the Mayor, but I don't consider that the mayor has filed any charges as he has not haven't seen them. I got a typewritten document from him."

When asked if the board had done any thing with the "document" he answered:

"Asked if anything would be done with reference to a hearing, I said I would not tell until he had conferred with commissioner Carr.

Twice Taken From Court.

The only issue between Chief Harmon and Mayor Horigan is that the former refused to sit down when ordered to do so, while the drawing of jurors was in progress.

The Mayor stated to the officer that he had no more right to be there than any citizen, and that if he remained in the room he must do as the others did. The chief insisted on standing, and after a long struggle the chief was escorted out by an officer.

SEEK MEDAL FOR CHARLESTOWN GIRL

Friends of Marie Tierney After Massachusetts Humane Society Decoration.

Friends of Miss Marie Tierney of No. 2 Brown court, Charlestown, who rescued a six-year-old niece at the Dewey Beach outhouse in Charlestown, on July 4, have decided to bring the brave deed to the attention of the Massachusetts Humane Society.

Gracie Woods, the little girl, was sitting in the foot at the bathhouse, but in some unknown manner slipped into the water. Many people who were on the wharf screamed with fright, but as they were all women in that section none dared attempt a rescue.

Miss Tierney, who was standing on the beach, some distance away, ran to the scene and, without a moment's hesitation, dove under the surface, and with a few quick strokes, swam to the spot just as the child was going down for the third time.

Grasping the child with her left arm she swam back to the beach and then started to further rescue.

Miss Tierney is eighteen years of age and is very popular among the younger set in the Bunker Hill district. She is a vocalist of no mean ability and is well known in church and social circles.

CAR ACCIDENTS STIR SOMERVILLE

"Loss of Life Held Too Lightly," Protests One Patron of "Hoodoo" Line.

Twice during the past week the residents of Somerville have been aroused by accidents on the Union Square-Sullivan Square short car line, called the "Hoodoo" line. On Tuesday morning a car bound from Union Square to Sullivan Square, while under the bridge of the Boston & Maine Railroad, on Washington street, jumped the track. This was caused by a faulty rail and the car collided with a car which was bound in the opposite direction. Miss Ellen Dwyer of Rossmore street and Miss Elizabeth Gartland of Prospect street were riding on the forward seat and were slightly injured. Both were removed to their homes in the police ambulance and attended by a physician.

The excitement caused by this accident had hardly died out before another accident occurred. The people are up in arms against what they claim is carelessness on the part of the operators of the Hoodoo Electrical.

Last Thursday morning Daniel Connors of No. 11 Hollis C. Bedford, was driving a carryall, containing his wife and two children. While crossing Washington street, on Medford avenue, a Hoodoo car collided with the carryall and threw the occupants to the ground. Fortunately they were badly injured and had to be attended by a physician.

"These accidents are becoming too frequent," said one passenger today, "for fatal accidents in one week show a lack of caution on the part of the operators and unless some action is taken to prevent further accidents, a report will have to be made to the commissioners. The loss of life is held too lightly. Some precaution should be used. I have never met anyone who has asked the railroad to run their cars at express train speed. I hope that the road will take warning from the two accidents of the past week and will use precautionary measures to prevent the loss of life and injury to pedestrians and patrons of the Elevated Company's cars."

Fisk O'Hara at the Globe.

Fisk O'Hara, the Irish singing comedian, whose sudden rise to the place of a star was sudden but well-deserved tribute to his dramatic abilities, will be seen at the Globe Theatre this week in the romantic Irish drama, "Thou Art There," beginning with a matinee tomorrow. The drama is in four acts. All scenes are laid in Ireland. The story in brief is that of a young Irish sculptor who is struggling for fame and recognition. He falls in love with the richest girl in the Emerald Isle, and the plot, from that point on, is filled with romantic interest. The ending is a happy one. During the play Mr O'Hara will sing several songs of his own composition. Notable among these is a new version of "Kathleen Mavourneen," Ireland's favorite song. There will be matinees today, Wednesday and Saturday.

BALLOON TRAGEDIES AROUSE FEARS OF AERONAUTS.

Wreck of Dirigible Follows Fatalities in Explosion of Lovelace Aviator.

AERONAUTS BARELY SAVED

Man and Woman Killed and Injured in the Explosion.

London, Aug. 13—The tragic death of a girl and a man, and the injury of six people through the explosion of the Lovelace balloon, followed quickly by the accident to the dirigible II, to-day, has considerably dampened the airship ardor of Londoners.

The military balloon Dirigible II., which made a successful 2½ hour trip yesterday afternoon at Aldershot, under the guidance of Colonel Capper, chief of the aerostatic service, made another ascent to-day and manoeuvred half an hour.

Barely Escape.

When it was descending a strong breeze blew the airship over and the envelope was torn and the propeller was damaged. The repairs will take two or three days.

That no one was hurt is considered remarkable, the aeronaus barely escaping.

In the Lovelace accident two persons were killed and six injured by the explosion of the gas bag at the grounds of the Franco-British Exhibition. The balloon was owned by Captain Thomas T. Lovelace, a member of the New York Aero Club.

His Secretary Killed.

Preparations for an ascent were being made when the accident occurred. The cause is supposed to have been the throwing down of a lighted match. Miss Hill, eighteen years old, and secretary to Captain Lovelace, was one of the persons killed. She was burned almost to the point of immolation.

The other person killed, a man, and the six guys who sustained injuries were employed by Captain Lovelace. Captain Lovelace's clothes were burned, but otherwise he received no injuries.

AIRSHIPS IN CONTROL OF COUNTRY OVER WHICH THEY SAIL IS DECISION

Paris, Aug. 13.—The various inventors and others interested in aerial navigation propose an amendment to international law defining the extent of a country's sovereignty in the air.

According to international law, a State's sovereignty over the waters surrounding it extends as far "as a cannon ball will carry." When that law was enacted the maximum carrying capacity of cannons was between seventy and two thousand and thirty thousand feet. It is much greater now. Krupp's biggest cannon that carried more than twenty kilometres (over twelve miles), while the latest American cannon is reputed to carry thirty-five kilometres (about twenty-one miles).

As a cannon shooting straight up in the air carries only half as far as it does in a horizontal position, a State's sovereignty over the atmosphere would be between six and ten miles, if the new measurement is adopted.

Accordingly all modern airships thus far constructed would be under the jurisdiction of the States over which they travel.

RUSSIAN GRAND DUKE BUILDING AIRSHIP IN CONTEST FOR $25,000

St. Petersburg, Aug. 15.—Russia has endorsed the contest for producing the perfect airship. Financed partly by one of the Grand Dukes, an airship is being built in the military ballooning park near the capital.

Meanwhile, inventors are being encouraged by the Government, which is offering a prize of $25,000 for the best heavier-than-air flying machine. The competition is to be held next year. The Government is also subsidizing the Russian Aero club, whichhas been formed at Odessa. On condition that the club places all its aerostats at the disposal of the Government in time of war, it is to receive an annual subsidy of $2,500.

AUSTRIAN RULER ORDERS BALLOON FOR NEPHEWS WHO WILL ASCEND ALONE

Vienna, Aug. 15.—The passion for ballooning has invaded the imperial family to such an extent that its main devotees, Archdukes Henry and Joseph Ferdinand, have persuaded the Emperor to let them have an airship of their own.

Accordingly, Francis Joseph has ordered the military aeronautic institution to build a balloon for his nephews, of no more than thirteen hundred metres capacity. It is to be finished in October and the two archdukes intend to make their first ascension before the assembled court to show their skill.

WILBUR WRIGHT ENTERS NORTHCLIFFE CONTEST FOR $50,000 AIR PRIZE

Paris, Aug. 15.—Wilbur Wright has stated that he was willing to compete for the $50,000 prize offered by Lord Northcliffe, of the Daily Mail, for a successful airship flight from London to Manchester, a distance of 200 miles.

Competitors are allowed three stoppages en route. Asked if he thought there was any chance of the prize being won, Mr. Wright said: "It will be won within three years, and I am positive it will be won by it at no distant date, perhaps after I have finished in France with my present machine."

PARSEVAL BALLOON SAILS AROUND BERLIN NEARLY THREE HOURS

Berlin, Aug. 15.—The new Parseval dirigible balloon, which is constructed on the flexible system, made a flight over and around Berlin yesterday that lasted for two hours and forty-five minutes. The start was made at Tegel.

Various manoeuvres against and with a moderate wind were carried out on an altitude ranging from 800 to 1,000 feet. The airship showed excellent stability and answered to the will of the pilot fairly well. [illegible] The [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

MAKES PARADISE OUT OF DESERT

Imperial Valley Turned Into Rich Farms Through Irrigation.

ONCE A GREAT WASTE

Now the Land, Split Into Small Farms, Yields Good Livings to Occupants.

Washington, Aug. 15.—President Roosevelt's appointment of a commission to inquire into means for making farm life more profitable and attractive calls attention to the wonderful progress made recently by the vast irrigation projects in the Southwest. These present the possibility of living on profitable farms so small and highly cultivated that they resemble suburban gardens and will give their dense populations practically all the advantages of town life.

The most successful of these Western irrigation communities up to this time is Imperial Valley, formerly known as the Colorado Desert, in Southern California. It has been said that what Southern California is, in desirable qualities, as compared to the rest of the United States, so Imperial Valley is to the rest of Southern California.

500,000 Acres Available.

So wonderful were the statements made in an official report prepared for the Agricultural Department by C. E. Tait, Government Irrigation Engineer, that the department was afraid to undertake the responsibility of printing it, and Mr. Tait's superiors calmly pigeonholed it until President Roosevelt's active interest in irrigation projects and the personal interest taken in Southern California development by Senator Flint brought it to light.

The Tait report was then printed and issued from the Government Printing office as Senate document No. 246. Mr. Tait's report, after it saw the light, made such a favorable impression that he was soon after promoted and is now in charge of the great Government projects in Arizona.

Imperial Valley contains nearly half a million acres of land capable or irrigation. This is almost twice as much land as the total acreage in all the rest of Southern California that is now under irrigation. The climate in Imperial Valley is such that it is practically a natural hothouse, and fruit and vegetables may be sent to market far in advance of any other locality, thus insuring to the lucky Imperial farmers the highest prices for their products.

Around the town of Brawley, which is the headquarters of the cantaloupe growing territory, a farmer is looked upon as a shiftless failure if his net profits from his land do not exceed $200 per acre per year. Eight hundred dollars per acre is common and as much as $2,000 has been made from a single acre in one year.

All of this land was acquired at the Government rate of $1.25 per acre in "desert claims" up to 320 acres in size. One of these 320-acre ranches under cultivation for only three years near Brawley, has made for its owner a net profit of $25,000 in a single year.

15,000 Now in Valley.

The area under irrigation in Imperial Valley is the largest ever developed in one place in America, and the soil itself is declared to be the richest known in the world. It is of unknown depth. Wells have been sunk 600 feet without striking rock. On top of that is the statement that the waters of the Colorado River contain a sediment of enormous fertilizing value. Each acre foot of the water, it is officially estimated, contains over $3 worth of commercial fertilizers. The fertilizer is worth more than the farmer pays for his water.

Imperial Valley lands are those which President Roosevelt, in a message to Congress, declared would be worth $1,500 an acre to their owners.

The population of the valley at this time is said to be about 15,000. Mr. Taft, in his report, says that when the average size of a farm is reduced to forty acres there will be 10,000 farms with a rural population of upward of 50,000 persons. This, he says, should be accompanied by a town population of at least 25,000.

There are six town sites laid out in the valley, and there is a great deal of rivalry between the towns as to which shall be the future metropolis. The valley has grown so rapidly that it was organized as a new county this Spring, when it cut loose from San Diego County.

The Southern Pacific is at present the only railroad running through the valley.

Big Profits Realized.

Cantaloupes were first grown in the valley in 1905 at Brawley. The growers formed a mutual association to handle the crop. Last year 1,187 acres were put in cantaloupes and 182,428 crates were shipped. The net returns to the growers, after all expenses of marketing and shipping were paid, were $327,790, or a net return of nearly $300 for each acre under cultivation.

Watermelons also grow to perfection. Fifteen carloads were shipped from Brawley in 1906 and many more since then. There are 1,500 acres in grapes in the valley. The grapes produce a profitable crop after the first year. Asparagus is said to have been demonstrated to be one of the most profitable crops, as much as $1,800 having been cleared in a season from an experimental acre. Bermuda onions have been grown successfully at Brawley and will probably be grown on a large scale in the future.

Other successful crops are tomatoes, sugar beets, sweet potatoes, peas, beans, cabbage, lettuce, radishes, etc. Nearly all the vegetables are planted in the Fall and Winter.

MRS. PATTEN SUED ON DE LUXE NOTE

"Corn King" Says He'll Fight Collection on Paper Obtained in Book Sale.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—Mrs. Amanda L. Patten of Evanston, wife of James A. Patten, millionaire, "corn king," has been sued for $2,000 on one of the notes which she signed for a set of de luxe edition books, which, she claims, were fraudulently misrepresented to her.

The complainant is S. T. Warfield, who bought the note from J. H. McFarland, local agent of the eastern concern which made the sale.

Mr. Patten has refused payment on the note, in compliance with his declaration that he would fight any attempt to collect money on the notes his wife signed.

Warfield is an innocent party in the suit. He paid full face value, except for the regular discount, for the note, knowing its signer to be financially beyond question. The difference between the Pattens and McFarland, he believes, do not affect his interest in the note. Mr. Patten will, however, contest payment.

McFarland disappeared from his quarters in the Annex shortly after he had obtained and hastily negotiated Mrs. Patten's notes.

ANGER NEARLY FATAL.

York, Pa., Aug. 15.—Seizing William Landman, six years old, Mrs. Rosa Abronson, in a fit of anger, it is said, placed a rope about his neck and suspended him from a balcony. A passer-by cut him down just in time to save his life. Mrs. Abronson has been arrested on the charge of attempting to hang the [illegible]

Annual Convention Comes to Close After Important Week in I. T. U. History.

THANKS VOTED SPEAKERS

After a most busy week, taken up with the transaction of many important matters to the 50,000 union printers throughout the country and favored with ideal weather and a gay round of entertainment by the Boston committee, the 54th annual convention of the International Typographical Union came to a close yesterday afternoon in Mechanics' Hall, where sessions were held every day since last Monday.

In the opinion of the International officers of the I. T. U. and the delegates, this Boston convention was one of the most important ever held by the representative body of union printers in the United States and Canada. Notwithstanding the exceedingly hot weather of two days of the week the attendance at the sessions on those days was fully as large as at any other time and the business accomplished much of vital interest to the upbuilding of the organization.

The closing session was marked by the presentation of gifts to the local convention committee. Felicitations and thanks of the convention were extended to the various officers of the convention, and the speakers who addressed the delegates during the week and the Boston press.

Highly Praises Boston.

In bringing the convention to a close, International President James M. Lynch declared that the Boston convention was unsurpassed in entertainment and facilities provided for the delegates.

"The problem of entertaining such a convention is a serious one," said President Lynch. "I have attended ten conventions of the International Typographical Union as an officer and never have we been given the round of enjoyment and entertainment afforded by the Boston committee."

The committee on thanks reported a resolution extending the thanks of the convention to Mrs. Meredith Nicholson and the officers of the Boston Typographical Union, the members of the Boston committee, the Boston press, Chairman J. J. Lynch, press committee, William R. McCarthy, chairman; John Hitchcock, chairman of the Trade Agreement Department of the National Civic Federation; Edward St. Taylor, jr., of Boston, representing the American Newspaper Publishers' Association; Charles Francis of New York, president of the Printers' League Section; J. Berry of Cincinnati, president of the Printing Pressmen's Union; Robert Armstrong of Toronto, president of the Brotherhood of Bookbinders, and Gifford Pinchot, chief of the Bureau of Forestry, Department of Forestry, all of whom addressed the delegates during the convention; and to International President James M. Lynch, International Secretary-treasurer Joseph D. Bramwood and the other international officers on their able conduct of the I. T. U. and its convention.

Presents Many Gifts.

On behalf of the gift committee "Deacon" Hearn of Providence, R. I., Past President Norman S. McPhail of Boston Typographical Union with a diamond ring, President McPhail responded in an able speech of thanks. "Deacon" Hearn then proceeded to make the following gifts: To Treasurer Frank Flanagan of Boston Typographical Union, a diamond ring; secretary Philip McAuley of the committee of arrangements of Boston Typographical Union, a gold watch; to Robert Southard, chairman of the local reception committee, Louis A. Sommers and James F. Hickey, members of the local reception committee, a diamond ring; and to the following members of the Boston convention committee a set of gold scarf pins: Chairman Lynch, a gem ring, and a gold watch charm; Thomas F. Kane, Timothy J. Sullivan, Herbert W. Cooke, Robert T. Allen, Charles O. Wood, Robert Leonard, Edward F. Carpenter, Edward C. Dismy, Charles Tilman, John Wallace, William H. Fairfield and Charles T. Tenney, E. J. DePeritas, Thomas P. Curtin, Harry A. Rowell, Thomas F. McKinnon and James H. Butler.

Previous to the closing scenes of the convention a resolution was adopted expressing sorrow at the illness of Ex-Governor Guild in his present illness and extending to him speedy recovery.

The last business proposition to come before the convention were a resolution changing the membership of the committee from five to seven, which was adopted, and the reference to the executive committee of the resolutions calling for the establishment of the international headquarters in St. Louis, instead of Indianapolis where they now are, at the discretion of the I. T. U. building from funds now held in the treasury. The executive council will investigate the feasibility of these questions and report back to next year's convention, to be held at St. Joseph, Missouri.

LAUD HUB HOSTS AND MAKE GIFTS AS CONVENTION ENDS.

With the presentation of gifts to the local committees in charge of the assembly and the adoption of a resolution of thanks to all those who had contributed to their success, the seventh annual convention of the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, which had been holding sessions at the Hotel Brunswick, came to a close yesterday afternoon.

In the farewell address International President James J. Freel of New York declared this convention to be the greatest ever held by the organization. He lauded the efforts of the local committee in charge of the convention and a rising vote of thanks was tendered to the Boston Stereotypers' Union No. 2, Boston Electrotypers' Union No. 11 and Providence Stereotypers' Union No. 13, the latter organization having entertained the delegates and their friends during one day of the convention week.

The last scene of the convention was the report of the committee of thanks, William R. Sullivan, Delegate Sullivan, chairman, read a resolution extending the thanks of the I. S. E. U. to the Boston Globe, to William Redfern, chairman of the convention committee; Harry A. Rockwood, Thomas H. J. Lewis, Sergeant-at-Arms W. E. Parle, President Harry Lunt of the Stereotypers' Union No. 11, President William H. Weston of Boston Union No. 2, Boston No. 2; the Boston press and the local ladies' auxiliary.

The resolution was unanimously adopted and a rising vote of thanks given to the above mentioned. On behalf of the committee he presented Chairman William Redfern with a rocking chair, and Secretary McKenne a roll top desk; to William H. Murphy, a gold watch; to the committees, a camera; and to the members of the local committee, a gold medal bearing inscribed "I. S. E. U." To the following members of the committee there will be sent each a handsome seal leather pocketbook: Thomas Hall, Boston; J. J. Geurs of Chicago, William H. Weston of Boston, W. C. Powers of Detroit, and James D. Hamilton of Hartford.

He then presented the following ladies of the Boston Ladies' Auxiliary of the I. S. E. U., a gold watch each: Mrs. T. H. Thompson, president; Mrs. W. Weston, vice-president; Mrs. Williams, secretary; Miss A. L. Williams, treasurer; Mrs. William H. Murphy and Mrs. Harry Lunt. The committee then turned over the balance of the gift fund for the use of the visiting ladies' auxiliary. Mrs. James Freel, wife of the international president, thanked the convention and the Boston ladies' auxiliary on behalf of the visiting ladies for the kind reception since coming to Boston.

Final adjournment was then ordered, the next convention to be held at Kansas City, Mo., in 1909.

Freed From Jail, Garland's Beautiful Wife Is Missing

Divorce Hinted as Finale to Peruvian Diplomat's Romance—Clashed in Los Angeles

Mr. and Mrs. Allessandro Garland.

Los Angeles, Aug. 15.—Young Allessandro Garland, son of Vice-President Garland of Peru and former attache at the Peruvian legation in Washington, is hunting for his beautiful wife, Mrs. Louise Scott Garland, who disappeared from here after freeing her spouse in jail and refusing to bail him out.

When Garland heard his wife was not to be found he made a highly significant circular motion with his forefinger applied to the side of his head and said tersely, "Whew!"

The inference from this was that the pretty Mrs. Garland had temporarily become bereft of her better judgment.

It is reported that Garland is considering a suit for divorce.

Mr. and Mrs. Garland had been arrested after leaving the Alexandria Hotel, where at the boarding house of Mrs. Emily Brown at 402 East Twentieth street, they had had a violent quarrel in their lodgings soon after their arrival.

The cause of the quarrel is a mystery. Some reports give it that Garland refused to pay a balance of $4 on their room rent. But that is considered too trivial to be the real trouble.

Objected to Letters.

Another reason, and one which is regarded as much more plausible, is that Garland objected to his beautiful wife corresponding with a number of Washington officials and politicians, notably Senator Charles A. Edwards, the Alaska Democratic campaign committee last year. Garland objected to receiving so many "mushy love letters."

Senator Edwards was the man who had a violent altercation with Garland a year ago and Jones in Washington in front of the hotel where Mrs. Garland, then Miss Louise Scott, was staying. Garland subsequently stabbed in this altercation. The matter was hushed up.

Allessandro Garland, twenty-two years old, is a handsome youth, though of rather small stature. He was one of a number of Peruvian youths sent by this country to the Peruvian legation at Washington last year for diplomatic training.

He showed considerable aptitude, however, for the diplomacy of the tea table and the drawing room. He became conspicuous in the train of the beautiful Mrs. Scott, who was already a bride and in whom Washington was greatly interested. She was said to be a divorcee, her husband having been an Englishman. He was about thirty-two years older than Garland in manner and of marked beauty. She claimed kinship with the wife of Secretary Bonaparte, then Attorney-General.

Stabbed in Street.

On the night of May 15, 1907—at 2 o'clock in the morning, in fact—Colonel Charles A. Edwards called — the De Soto, the apartment house where Mrs. Scott was staying with a friend, Miss Jean E. Haines. Colonel Edwards desired to see Miss Watson. He was told to call at some other time. Colonel Edwards set him down on the front steps of the De Soto on though to wait for anything to happen along.

Soon enough—along came Allessandro Garland, the Peruvian attache, with Mrs. Scott on his arm. Colonel Edwards knew them.

But there was a mix-up between Colonel Edwards and the dinner party on the sidewalk and down Garland shouted: "You are a liar!"

Then Garland struck Edwards in the Massachusetts avenue.

Edwards' friends came out. Garland was taken to the hospital, where it was found he had been stabbed just above the heart. The knife had penetrated the lung. Garland lost considerable blood and was very sick man, but recovered. The police and the whole matter gradually died out in Washington talked the matter over in frenzied interest till the next sensation came along.

Some of the questions asked in the mystery were: Did Mrs. Garland stab Garland? What caused the fight? Why did Garland come to make a complaint against Edwards? Who was Mrs. Scott?

Violent Quarrel in Room.

The next heard was the quiet marriage of Garland and Mrs. Scott and the departure of Garland from the Peruvian legation.

The two arrived here suddenly a few days ago and registered as man and wife, Mrs. Brown at No. 402 East Twentieth street. Then began the quarrel.

Mr. and Mrs. Garland rushed such a terrific "spat" that Mrs. Brown called the police and had them ejected. They were arrested on a charge of disturbing the peace. At the University Police Station Sergeant Roy Winterrod fired their bail at $50 each. Mrs. Garland drew a big roll from her purse and bailed herself out, but would not deposit any cash for her husband. She said to the sergeant:

"He can get out of here the best way he knows. But I'll not furnish his bail or pay his fine. He never did anything for me and I'll not do anything for him."

Then she went down and dictated every detail of the quarrel to a reporter. She said she knew Garland when she first came here to nurse my sister, Mrs. George Booth, who is in the Angeles Hospital and he followed me. I want to find a lawyer who knows Washington. I know Senator Frank P. Flint. He is a lawyer, I am going to see him. It will take a good strong man to be my adviser in this predicament.

Smashes Front Door.

And out she went from the station, presumably to hunt up Senator Flint. But, before she did so, she went back to Mrs. Browns' lodging house on East Twentieth street and broke the front door glass and hurled some picturesque language at Mrs. Brown. She was persuaded to leave, and finally did so. To Mrs. Brown's dismay she did not send money to pay the balance on the room rent or even to secure her bag.

Meanwhile Garland was left in the station house for lack of bail. He had given a false name when arrested, as his wife did. When he was searched a letter was found on him, addressed to his wife and bearing in one corner this inscription: "Minority conference Room, House of Representatives, U. S."

Garland's wife should not know he had the letter, for he whispered to Sergeant Roy that he did not want her to see that letter. Mrs. Garland did not see the missive, as it happened.

Mysterious Mission.

The Garlands came into court the next morning and were discharged. They may have left town by this time. Garland was made of Senator Flint's partner, Dudley Buck Hardin, but Senator Flint had gone to their offices for advice. Harker said:

"It would not be right or proper to discuss this woman's affairs. She comes from a prominent, yes, a very prominent family in Washington and is friends with Mr. Bonaparte. It is true that her husband was connected with the Peruvian legation.

"Her journey across the continent to nurse her sister was not a new one by any means in coming here. Her purpose is a laudable one and should create a great deal of sympathy for her if it were made known. But I cannot discuss it further, nothing to do with the present affair. She is known as Mrs. Louise Scott here and that name will do."

What the mysterious other errand is that brought Mrs. Garland here is puzzling the police and others who have been investigating the case. It is taken for granted that here is a Washington clue to the mystery and it is thought that the matter may be elucidated from that city when Mrs. Garland returns to Los Angeles. When asked if he would sue Mrs. Garland for divorce, he answered emphatically: "That depends."

FIND WOMAN LEPER IN MILL TENEMENT

Fall River, Aug. 15.—Discovery of a well developed case of leprosy of two or three years' standing in one of the most thickly populated tenement districts of this city has terrified the residents of that section.

The victim is Mrs. Mary J. Costy, thirty-nine years old and mother of nine children. Preparations are being made now for removing her to the state leper colony on Penikese Island without delay. Dr. George E. Butler of Mrs. Costa was also be carefully watched for the first sign of transmission of the dread disease.

Costa was born in San Miguel, Azore Islands. She came to this city with her family six years ago. She is now living at 15 Bowen street, off Bedford and Morgan streets, in the heart of the mill tenement district. She is a native of Portugal.

The presence of leprosy was first discovered by Dr. Arthur G. Cowvin, who was called to attend Mrs. Costa. Dr. Cowvin was supposed to be some ordinary skin disease. Dr. Lewis perceived that the woman had some trouble out of the usual and called in Dr. George E. Butler, the skin special ist, who made microscopic examination of the patient's cuticle and pronounced her malady leprosy.

Prompt report was made to the health authorities, who made arrangements this afternoon to have Mrs. Costa transported to the island.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A New-Found Relative

As Norman gazed open-mouthed after the resigned beauty he muttered the figure of Nora. A maid emerged from the servants' entrance and came out to the gate. Norman tarried a bill into her hand and asked:

"can you tell me the name of that young lady who has just entered the house?"

The startled girl was surprised into an answer.

"I only know her as Miss Fanny," she replied. "She calls here to see the butler, Mr. Wilson."

"Thank you," Norman said, and the girl went on.

Norman resolved to walk and raced up and down the grounds, running into the house by shrubbery that grew along the wall. His patience was soon rewarded.

"Miss Fanny," unmistakably Nora Harding, the woman whose mysterious influence had come into his life, and whose money he was soon seen to be the cause of, came down the walk. She turned into the house and would have passed him, but he stepped boldly up to her, lifted his hat and said:

"Pardon me, Miss Harding, but may I ask what you are doing in the house of my uncle, Mr. Wilson?"

Her self-possession did not for a moment leave her.

"I think you have made a mistake, sir. Will you allow me to pass?"

"I have made no mistake," Norman cried. "I know you perfectly, I——"

Norah Harding lifted her thin veil and regarded him calmly, but with nervous earnestness.

"Mr. Taylor, you have made a great mistake, not in your recognition of me, although that is fully as serious, but in coming to my house. Had he not been blinded by rage and in a dimly lit room, he would have recognized his error as I have done, and as I did when I first saw you on my way in."

"You will recall that one of the provisions of our agreement, which means much to you, I assure you, is that you re main inactive for the present."

"I cannot remain inactive," Norman cried. "There is something——"

"I know that there has come into the case a new element for you—your love for Ruth Gordon and your wish to quietly make allowances for that. She is a dear girl and your love is worthy of her. A very tragedy that grew out of your own love is that makes it necessary for me to move slowly.

"Now, go back to your new lodgings, and I should advise you to move again quietly. Some one is on the alert in search of finding you there as I have been, and I know not how long ere you will meet a new person in the case very soon. This time Norman could not take it quietly. He stood there as if he had been hit by a sledge hammer.

Before Norman could utter a word a lovely bowlegged, Norman hurried away from the neighborhood. He went for a long walk to clear his head, and by the time he walked a growing distrust of his singular assertion.

He resolved to try it on Burt Harris, who had been loitering toward them from Fifth avenue drew up to the curb. Harris, without a word, stepped inside and was whisked away.

"Norman!" he cried, as the car started on.

"What is it?" said Norman.

"It's a long story," Harris said, resuming his seat and producing cigarettes. "Now see, old chap, I pieced together the stuff you told me and I found that the game was up. I decided it was time for action. Otherwise you might get into a mix-up. I've been trying to get up to you closely.

"I couldn't find you, and old Martin Gordon swore to me you had not been there. So I found Burt Harris, a friend here's house, and I found him there with his wife and baby. Burt's a married man, by the way, she's a sweet girl, and I think luck is turning your way.

"I found that I was your friend and that you had told me a lot. I decided to help you in the matter, so I got in that direction, and I thought it would be a shame to have you miss the opportunity of seeing Miss Gordon.

"I threw told me his whole story, and it is perfectly plausible; no one can help believing it. And he has been in a position to write to you the very night he was to say with Miss Gordon.

"He had her do the same and the next day they compared both statements and decided that they were right, so they posted them with Burt to mail. Of course, he ought to be punished in some way.

"I think Drew thinks he is producing those documents was at hand. He gave them to Burt to mail, and Burt, of course, mailed them.

"Now I want you to make a similar statement, which I will witness, to publish with them. Burt will be a witness. I have notified the District Attorney where they are to be published, and I think I have you seen them. They will not be bothered by the police, and you must keep under cover, at least for the present. Don't move from where you are. When you want me, use the telephone. Burt and I will attend to it. It's pretty good as far as it goes.

"But what effect will this have on the affair?" asked Norman.

"Why, you've been hypnotized, scientifically. You were not responsible for the murder. You are only admitting the things you have told me in confidence. I'll have it typewritten. Don't omit a detail, and make it as voluminous as you like. I got space on it, you know."

Norman sat down and dictated every detail that he could remember of his visit to James Gordon on the night of the murder, and the events leading up to his imprisonment. His innocence, his determination to prove it, his wild infatuation for Ruth Gordon and his marriage.

He told of his meeting with Gardon, and the name of Ruth, and of the scrap of paper which he had found on the floor of the apartments with the scrawl.

"An Taylor is inno—"

This he gave to Harris to be reproduced in the story. Harris undertook the story of his flight to New York, but left the present to say nothing of his subjection.

An Unexpected Caller

He was not yet sure of his uncle's motive in sending him a prisoner, but a possible invoice Ruth, Harris took the story on the typewriter and read it over gleefully.

"That will start something," he said.

Norman had left the many lodgings to his East Side indigues. It had grown dark and that the friend Drew's apartment, his

AMOSKEAG THROWS OVER PILLSBURY CANDIDACY.

Boston-Owned New Hampshire Mills Makes Up With the B. & M.

NOW BATTLE WAXES WARM

Editor Halts Anti-Railroad Campaign to His "Taxes" at Cotton Men.

Manchester, N. H., Aug. 15.—Satisfied that the Boston & Maine rule of the Republican party in New Hampshire isn't going to be overthrown—this year, at least—the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company got from under the K. W. Pillsbury gubernatorial candidacy to-day, declared its intention of putting Amoskeag delegate tickets into the ten wards of the metropolis, and left Mr. Pillsbury to go it alone, with only the backing of those who have faith in Mr. Pillsbury's present determination to overthrow the dominion of New Hampshire by Boston men.

The announcement for the Amoskeag was made by Col. W. Parker Straw, whose father rules Manchester as agent of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company. Young Mr. Straw is president of the Common Council, which meets once or twice a year to determine just how much money shall be raised by taxation here and how it must be spent. The Amoskeag is Manchester's biggest taxpayer. It was paying so much a few years ago that it went to court about it, and had its assessment cut down. Its newest mill, probably valued at $1,000,000 and therefore worth at least that sum, is at present exempt from taxation for a ten-year period by grace of the Board of Mayor and Aldermen.

Mr. Putney Happy.

Henry M. Putney, chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, sails from Boston Tuesday for Prince Edward Island, to be gone a month. Mr. Putney goes away happy. He appears to have had some premonition of W. Parker Straw's announcement. Mr. Putney goes away from here satisfied that Pillsbury is all in, done and out. Everybody doesn't agree with Mr. Putney in his diagnosis of the situation.

The Railroad-Cotton Mill machine can unquestionably boss the gubernatorial nomination from Rosecrans W. Pillsbury—and it is unquestionably going to do so—and Mr. Pillsbury undoubtedly knows it, but then, what?

Republicans who believe that Henry B. Quinby of Lakeport, the railroad candidate, can be elected, are most as scarce as hen's teeth.

In the background looms up the spectral figure of the Hon. William Eaton Chandler of Concord and Waterloo, whom the Boston & Maine Railroad dragged out of the United States Senate by the hair of his head in 1901, and who today, nevertheless, is calling for Harmony and chumming with Putney and all the other railroad men.

Will it be Chandler?

Will It Be Chandler?

That's what all New Hampshire is asking tonight, with the Republican State Convention set for Thursday of next week.

Will it be Chandler?

The railroad folks say Chandler is a reformed Reformer, that he's getting old, has no further ambitions, and would give New Hampshire an ideal administration.

Well, mebbe, mebbe, but there are New Hampshire folks who believe, nevertheless, that there is a good stiff punch left in the Chandler right arm, and that William Eaton is not be mad to forget. The Hon. William Eaton Chandler is human, and 1901 is less than a decade ago.

Fear of the Chandler bogie is said by some to be back of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company declaration that "Pillsbury keag is run by, from and in Boston, and the big cotton mill folk of Boston have long been in favor of passing the Boston & Maine system over to Charles Mellen and his associates in the New York, New Haven & Hartford. T. Jefferson Coolidge, Jr., is a director in the New Haven. T. Jefferson Coolidge, Jr., is the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company.

William E. Chandler has been New Hampshire's foremost opponent of the Merger. Senator Chandler has said that in his opinion the people of New Hampshire can take care of the Boston & Maine in politics. He has little fear of the bigger octopus.

Under the Spotlight.

Students of present day New Hampshire politics say that if there had been any show for Pillsbury and his anti-Boston & Maine campaign, the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company would have been for Pillsbury. Mr. Pillsbury's newspaper, the Manchester Union, maintains today that the Amoskeag is afraid of a thorough revision of the New Hampshire methods of taxation. The Amoskeag Manufacturing Company may have reason for that fear.

And does anybody look for relief from the Democratic party in New Hampshire?

Since the passing of Brewer Frank Jones, the Boston & Maine possesses of his day in New Hampshire, the Big Noise in Democratic councils up this way has been Aleph W. Sullaway of Franklin, the only resident director of the B. & M. in New Hampshire.

Next after Mr. Sullaway comes, undoubtedly, Hon. John M. Mitchell of Concord, leading New Hampshire attorney for the Boston & Maine Railroad.

Below Mr. Sullaway and below Mr. Mitchell come many others, but even a handful of little gentlemen pigs are not at all averse to the spotlight, and who know how to take orders and how to carry them out.

The position of the Boston & Maine and the Amoskeag may open the eyes of New Hampshire voters.

The Typhoid Zone.

The mill and the railroad broke apart serving notice each on the other. Up came word from Boston to the mill men to "get in line for Taft." They didn't like the word, by any means.

"Theirs not to reason why. Theirs but to do, or die."

The Boston & Maine folks, following Gallinger and for "anybody to beat Taft, accused the Amoskeag of downright ingratitude. In the Legislature of 1907 the Amoskeag had "borrowed the army" to keep the Spaulding dance dime out of the Merrimac river, lost below here. The Democratic Senate went into executive session (put its only reporter out into the corridors and locked the door on him) and the Amoskeag trick was turned.

Perhaps Mr. Pillsbury's newspaper may have something to say now about the Amoskeag's taxes, and the possible locating of the Amoskeag tax question on Manchester's miles and miles of rotten streets, absence of proper sewerage in the Manchester Typhoid Zone, and other little things like that.

The Manchester Union may also be inquiring how comes it that a corporation ward like Ward 7 is veritable little pocket borough with its 2,561 voters, has the same numerical representation in Board of Aldermen, Common Council and School Committee as independent Ward 8, with 1,152 legal voters?

Beware of the Glass.

One of the biggest Boston & Maine Republicans in New Hampshire (a Concord man) said to a reporter months ago, when the get-out-for-Taft edict came to the mill folks from Boston:

"There isn't a corporation in New England that has more glass exposed than the Amoskeag Mills."

Will Mr. Pillsbury heave a brick through the Amoskeag glass?

Will he label it "Taxes"?

FEAR AIRSHIP WILL HELP SMUGGLERS

Maine Game Commission Also Has Other Fears of Law-Breaking by Sky Route.

Rangeley, Me., Aug. 15.—The Maine Fish and Game commissioners are all at sea over the question sure to arise over aerial hunting licenses. Should a hunter let fall his drag anchor and gather up a big moose or a deer and sail away in his merry sky route, what law could reach him? He has got beyond upon the soil of the state of Maine. The commissioners are wondering if the states regulating fish and game include the atmosphere of sky.

Shipping of big game will become quite easy by the sky route. Route is cute a hunter fifty dollars for a license and another fifty in expense before he can get deer through the state lines. The number of wardens would have to be increased to an extent incapable of enumeration to watch poachers in sky-hunting clothes. It would be comparatively easy to slaughter big game and ship it away from Maine in these craft despite wardens.

There would be no end to smuggling across the Canadian border which is now carried on now despite the cordon of wardens around it, also the line and the dirigible smuggling craft could lift China-men across the sky line between the two countries as easily as diamonds, rum or cloth goods.

Six Charming Newport Widows Whose Combined Wealth Is $150,000,000

MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT

MRS. WM. S. LEARY

MRS. RICHARD GANSEBILL

MRS. OGDEN GOELET

MRS. ROBERT GOELET

MRS. HERMAN OELRICHS

MRS. OELRICHS ON WAY TO NEWPORT

Soon to Join Colony of Richest Group of Widows in the World.

Newport, R. I., Aug. 15.—With the return to Newport early in September of Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, Newport society will be graced by a total of $150,000,000 worth of charming widowhood.

This stupendous wealth is vested in six widows, six o' 'em, count 'em:

Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, Mrs. "Ollie" Belmont, Mrs. William B. Leeds, Mrs. Ogden Goelet, Mrs. Robert Goelet and Mrs. Richard Gambrill.

Mrs. "Ollie" Belmont is the widow of the late Oliver H. P. Belmont. She was formerly Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt. She divorced Vanderbilt and wedded O. H. P. Belmont, since deceased. As the owner of Marble Palace, president of the Bungalow Bridge Whist Club and a multi-millionaire in her own right, Mrs. Belmont is a spectacular figure, even in the Newport set.

Bequest of Millions.

Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, who is expected here soon from abroad, was formerly Miss Theresa Fair. She was left many millions by her father, the late Senator Fair. She married Herman Oelrichs, who died on a trans-Atlantic trip two years ago. Prior to that, however, the relations between Mr. and Mrs. Oelrichs had been painfully strained and the wife had gone so far as to withdraw from her husband the power of attorney she had given him to manage her immense estate.

Mrs. William B. Leeds, formerly Mrs. Nannie May Stewart Worthington, was the divorced wife of George L. Worthington. She married Leeds, the tin-plate magnate who founded Point Villa from Fred W. Vanderbilt, just to gratify her social ambitions. Mrs. Leeds is the owner of the famous $360,000 pearl necklace, which was on exhibition season in Newport, when it was kept in a glass case and watched by a uniformed guard.

Mrs. Richard Gambrill is a rich and very charming widow. She is greatly sought after by the men, but is naturally averse to their attentions, fearing that her millions may be the magnet for their assiduities, despite her pretty face.

Lost Diamond Fame.

Mrs. Ogden Goelet of lost diamond fame was left forty millions when her husband died. She is now in mourning at Ochre Court for her mother, the late Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, who was known as America's greatest matchmaker on account of the brilliant marriages contracted by her children. Ogden Goelet is the sister of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., and of Lady Herbert, widow of the late Sir Michael Herbert of London. She is the mother of the Duchess of Roxburghe (May Goelet).

Mrs. Robert Goelet, formerly Miss Harriett Aspinwall, is at her Narragansett Pier villa. She has just as many millions as Mrs. Ogden Goelet. She spends her Winters cruising on her steam yacht, Nahma, and is traveling on the Continent.

SOCIETY LEADER IN FLOWER DANCE

Boston Woman Most Beautiful in Smart Set Cotillion at Goelet Newport Villa.

Newport, R. I., Aug. 15.—To the rollicking melody of 'Ain't It Awful, Mabel', played by an expensive Hungarian orchestra, the cream of Newport society began at 10:30 tonight the opening cotillion at Mrs. Robert Goelet's flower dance, with Mrs. Bayard Thayer of Boston (nee Ruth Hopkins) acknowledged the handsomest woman present.

Nearly every woman and many of the men represented some flower, more that flower in corsage bouquet or buttoniere, and went by that floral name for the evening. The final floral and diverting touch was the grand presence of "Jimmy" Vose Parker as "The Last Rose of Summer," who led the opening cotillion with the hostess, who was "Mrs. Gladiolus."

As illuminating commentary, the disregard of the Smart Set for criticism, was the presence of Mrs. Herbert Parsons as one of the chief guests. She is the author of "The Family," in which her startling theory on trial marriage is advocated.

Flower Names for Rooms.

As many of the guests there have figured in sensational divorces, the apostle of the trial marriage was all the more noticeable among them.

Mrs. Goelet's villa on Narragansett avenue was decorated in harmony with the floral theme. The principal rooms on the ground floor were designated by some particular flower, like the Lady of the Valley room, the Gladiolus room, the American Beauty room and so on, the flower in question being used exclusively in that room.

Among the fashion leaders and the flowers they represented were: Mrs. Robert Goelet as Mrs. Gladiolus; Mrs. Richard Gambrill, as Mrs. Carnation; Mrs. Joseph R. Busworth, as Mrs. Gardenia; Mrs. William Payne Thompson, as Wild Rose; Mrs. Kinsbu Iver, as Mrs. Orchid; Mrs. Ogden Mills, as Mrs. Carnation; Miss Beatrice Mills, as Lily Woodbine; Mrs. Henry Carnegie Dibblee (nee Gladys Mills) as Mrs. Lavender; Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim, as Mrs. Camellia; Miss Edith Wetmore as American Beauty; Mrs. Nat Thayer, of Boston, as Mrs. Jessamine; Miss Constance Warren, as Miss Bluebell; Mrs. George Henry Warren, as Mrs. Sunflower; the Misses Milly and Irene Sherman, as the Misses Rosebud.

Boston Society Present.

Among others present were Mrs. May Brady Hoil, Countess von Berolding, Mr. and Mrs. Austin Gray of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. W. Watts Sherman, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Wrenn, Miss Sallie Thayer of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Thayer of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Agassiz of Cambridge, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Iselin, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Sorchan, Miss Emily Mott, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Mortimer Brooks, Comodore and Mrs. Elbridge Gerry, Mr. Peter Rendon Collier, Mr. and Mrs. Craig Biddle, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Bullock, Mr. and Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Dillon Ripley and Mrs. Henry Clews and their daughter, Mrs. Herbert Parsons.

GOELET WAGED WAR ON CAMERA ARTIST

Multi-Millionaire Was Going to Stop Invader But He Didn't.

Newport, R. I., August 15.—Robert Walton Goelet, the only son of Mrs. Robert Goelet and the sole heir to $30,000,000, waged war this week in front of the New-port Casino with a free-lance photographer who had been working from the opposite side of the street for some days with the assistance of some friends without being molested. It was when he pointed his black box directly at "Bertie" Goelet that trouble began. "Bertie," with his Kaiser Wilhelm mustache, ran over to the free-lance man, and, pointing his finger directly in his face, said in a loud voice: "You dare publish my picture in any paper and I will knock your block clean off."

Somehow the inoffensive looking young man did not seem as much alarmed as he might have been, and wanted to know to whom and how fals was going to happen. "Bertie" said it would take place right then and there if he had any guff, said his Royal Highness.

Wilhelm was talking, "but he doesn't quite forget his surroundings. For instance: When it began to rain on the occasion mentioned he at once put on an overcoat, and observing a non-commissioned army officer nearby who was bewaring the wet, called out to him 'Didn't you bring a coat along?'

The sub-lieutenant replying in the negative Prince Henry ran to his automobile some hundred feet away, got a rubber blanket and handed it to the soldier. "If I leave before you do just send it back to Kiel, and don't prepay charges, please," But it didn't.

CRUISER COLORADO GROUNDS ON POINT

Wireless Message Says Warship Was Floated Uninjured on Flood Tide.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 15.—The cruiser Colorado, which went ashore on Double Bluff, Rocky Point, in the Straits of San Juan de Fuca, near Vancouver Island, has been floated without damage.

The Colorado went aground at 8:30 a. m. to-day, and great apprehension was felt. Salvage steamers from Victoria went to her assistance.

The wireless station at the University of Washington got into communication with the cruiser to-night and was informed that the vessel was floated on the flood tide at 2:10 o'clock, and that no injuries were sustained.

MILWAUKEE'S AUDITORIUM.

Milwaukee, Aug. 15.—The corner stone of the Milwaukee Auditorium has been placed, the ceremony preceded by a splendid parade under the supervision of General Lewis Ayer. The building will cost $500,000.

Old Horse Retired After Two Score Years of Service

"Rob" Will Now Lead the Simple Life on the Big Moore Farm in Orange.

Orange, Aug. 15.—After more than two score years of equine usefulness "Rob," the sturdy Canadian horse owned by Frank Moore of Moore Hill Road is to retire for a well-earned rest. Rob is forty-six years old and, in Mr. Moore's opinion, is the oldest horse in the East, if not in the entire country.

Mr. Moore acquired Rob when the latter was six years old. He used him continuously for farm work up to a few years ago, when he reserved him only for light driving.

Now Rob is kept in the barn during the winter and is turned out to graze in the summer. In the pasture Rob frisks around like a colt and seems to enjoy life to the utmost.

Rob is in fine condition. His eyesight is perfect. His hearing is apparently as keen as ever. While his teeth are not quite so strong as they were in Rob's younger days they are still serviceable. Rob manages to eat about every morning his bag of oats and relishes his fodder.

Mr. Moore says that Rob shall have a comfortable home as long as he lives and the horse hasn't buried when he dies. Rob is known all over the Orange countryside, and is a pet of the children.

REVEALS GIRL AS EX-CIRCUS RIDER

Secret Comes Out After Accident; Rangeley Admires Expert Rider.

Rangeley, Me., Aug. 15.—Two hundred society people of the Rangeley Lake House and its cut front cream baked clams, and take in an old-fashioned hoss trot in Phillips, Thursday, in which there are thirty horses entered, the guests coming down the valley to open observation cars gaily decorated.

Miss Mabel Favor, an extremely pretty young woman at the Mountain View Hotel, who has been hiding her romance in the guise of waitress at this resort, was thrown from her mount on the Curry road this week and narrowly escaped being crushed to death by her heavy horse.

The mystery of her superb riding she confessed to a friend while convalescing after her accident, from which she will recover with nothing worse than a deep wound in her head.

Miss Favor, whose home is in New Hampshire, she says, and whose parents are wealthy, was always a lover of horseback riding and her love of excitement led her to run away from home and join a circus, where she readily got a place in the riding class. Her fearless method of jumping through fire rings till one day she broke struck a stiff post and left Pumpshire home. Although in any attire her father, who was even on the lookout for her, discovered her and spirited into the ring, demanding that she come home. It crushed a rose in the spectators thought it was an act on the bills, but which was real life.

Mabel returned home and there remained for a time till the old fever came on and she again left and became a waitress at fashionable hotels, where she now and been caused among the other girls by her own unusual which she tends in the hotel stables.

SAYS REPUBLICANS NEED $1,000,000

Funds Come Slow, Declares Sheldon; Returns Corporation Checks, He States.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—Treasurer of the Republican National Committee George R. Sheldon of New York to-day discussed the ignorance of corporation officials and even of members of Congress that a law had been passed denying the right of corporations to make contributions to campaign funds. Because of this ignorance, Mr. Sheldon said, he has been compelled to return to the senders a number of checks that had been received, although the money is greatly needed. He declared that it is the purpose to publish every individual contribution immediately after election.

"The decision to publish the names of all contributors," said Mr. Sheldon, "has made the matter of collecting funds up hill work. The gathering of funds will be done wholly under the auspices of the national committee and will be directed by the treasurer, the assistant treasurer, and the executive committee, who will soon be appointed. The suggestion had been made that state committees handle the collections in their own States, but this plan does not appear feasible. The national committee will have its own agents in each State.

Mr. Sheldon estimated that between $500,000 and $1,000,000 would be required to defray the traveling expenses of speakers in the national campaign and the cost at least $200,000 for the publication of literature in the hands of the committee. The cost of the campaign buttons at more than $25,000 and the campaign songs would run into $5,000 for the expenses of headquarters in Chicago and New York. There are also many other matters that will be costly bringing the total well above $1,000,000 needed.

DR. BROWN, FORMER HUB PASTOR, DIES

New York, Aug. 15.—The Rev. Dr. Oliver H. Brown, who was formerly pastor of the Eighteenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, is dead of heart disease. His ministry covered thirty years.

Born in Greenville, Ohio, in 1844, he was graduated from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1867, and from Drew Theological Seminary in 1869. He held pastorates in Lynn and Boston, Mass., Hoboken and Morristown, N. J., and in Baltimore and Washington. He retired from the ministry eight years ago. His wife, five sons and one daughter survive him.

PRINCE HENRY AUTO MAD, SAYS KAISER

Berlin, Aug. 15.—When the Kaiser learned that his brother, Prince Henry, stood from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. during the recent automobile trial races in Silesia, he exclaimed: "Henry must be going daft on autos. I will have to speak to him about that."

"His Royal Highness is certainly a motor enthusiast," said the friend with whom

THE BLUE STORE is a REAL FURNITURE STORE, one of the very few in this city where you can find REAL FURNITURE SALESMEN to serve you—who will be pleased to extend you every courtesy, whether looking or buying. VISITORS ARE WELCOME. We invite comparison, and it has been the means of saving some customers, this month alone, who had been attracted by noisy ads., which promised goods at cost or less, but who had the foresight to come here before concluding their buying, many hundreds of dollars, and our long established policy of never being undersold was never better exemplified.

This week we shall offer special bargains in DINING and LIVING ROOM FURNITURE. Also a special lot of high grade BRASS BEDS and a manufacturer's sample line of fine AXMINSTER and WILTON RUGS.

Money savings out of the ordinary on the dependable made-to-wear kind of Furniture and Carpets that this store is justly famous for.
